The first edition of "Menu and Advertising Guidelines for California Restaurants, Retailers, and Their Seafood Suppliers" was produced by the West Coast Fisheries Development Foundation, 812 SW Washington, Suite 900, Portland, OR 97205, (503) 222-3518, in September 1989. Funding was provided by the U.S. Department of Commerce, National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS), through the Saltonstall-Kennedy Act. This edition, with minor format and editing changes, and the addition of an index of market, common, regional and California names, was printed and distributed by the Sea Grant Extension Program, Cooperative Extension, University of California, Davis.

The following organizations assisted in the development of these guidelines: California Department of Fish and Game; California Department of Health Services; California Fisheries and Seafood Institute; California Grocers Association; California Restaurant Association; Consumer Action Agency; U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA); National Fisheries Institute; NMFS, Southwest Region; Pacific Coast Federation of Fishermen's Associations; Standard Fisheries; University of California Sea Grant Program. We are grateful to Mary Snyder, who coordinated the production of the FDA list, for her permission to use the list in this publication.

Introduction

A customer in a San Francisco restaurant scans the menu, looking for a new seafood item to try. She orders "butterfish." To her surprise, she receives a familiar entree, one she has eaten many times in Seattle, her home town. It is known there as "sablefish."

In a Los Angeles seafood market, a customer orders the product he most enjoys at home in Florida: butterfish. Imagine his surprise when the butterfish here proves to be an entirely different fish.

Recognizing the potential for confusion about the names of fish sold in restaurants and markets, groups within the California seafood industry have been trying for years to standardize nomenclature for seafood. The earliest work was done in the San Francisco and Los Angeles areas, and enthusiasm for this effort has spread throughout the state.

In 1986 the West Coast Fisheries Development Foundation was granted federal funding to complete the California seafood industry's preliminary list of acceptable and preferred names for seafoods sold in that state. The California Fisheries and Seafood Institute has served as catalyst and principal investigator, soliciting information from its members as well as providing statewide industry reviews of the list. Other seafood industry groups, foodservice associations, consumer groups, and government agencies have provided valuable input.

The result...a handbook for restaurants, retailers, and their seafood suppliers which provides nomenclature guidelines for seafood species sold in California. It is hoped that these guidelines will serve as a basis for communication in the sale, preparation, and serving of fish and seafood.

Nomenclature Guidelines

How restaurants, retailers, and their suppliers can eliminate confusion and increase customer satisfaction . . .

Communication is the Key to Customer Satisfaction!

Seafood customers have become more educated about the types of fish they prefer, and the ways they like to have it prepared.

Because there are no guidelines for those in the seafood industry to follow, various species and preparations are often given different names. What is labeled "butterfish" in one restaurant may be called "sablefish" in another. "Grilled" salmon may mean salmon cooked over briquets in a barbecue, or it may mean salmon cooked on a griddle.

How are customers to know what they are getting?

If they think they're getting one thing, but find it is something different, are they going to be dissatisfied and probably not return?

The best way to keep your customers coming back is to communicate with them. This is possible only if everyone speaks the same language.

The California Fisheries and Seafood Institute and the West Coast Fisheries Development Foundation (with the help of various seafood, retail, and restaurant associations) have compiled a listing of preferred names for seafoods which are sold in California.

If all those involved in selling seafood use correct names for their products, they will be "speaking the same language" and their customers will not be confused. People will know what to expect when they order, and as satisfied customers, they will come back again and again.

If You Sell Seafood:

1. Study these guidelines. Have your staff read them. By using the correct names for the seafoods you sell, you will gain the confidence of your customers!
2. Work with your restaurant and retail customers. Having learned the correct names of the products they buy from you, they can identify them properly on their menus and price lists. They can also learn from you how to handle substitutions when a particular product is not available.
3. Remember, for your own protection, and for the benefit of the seafood industry, you have these responsibilities:
 - * Use the correct names for the products you sell.
 - * Be honest with your customers about substitutions and explain why they are appropriate.
 - * Answer all your customers' questions about the seafood you are selling. If you can't respond immediately, get the information to your customer as quickly as possible.

If You Serve Seafood:

1. Study these guidelines. Have your staff read them. By using the correct names for the seafoods you sell, you will gain the confidence of your customers!
2. Before you decide to put a seafood item on your menu, be sure to talk to your supplier. Your supplier can tell you if that product will be available, and in what form. If it is available only in a frozen state, do not advertise it as "fresh." If it is fresh or seasonal, you may want to be more flexible in designing your menu to accommodate fluctuations in price and supply.
3. Consider how specific you want to be in your menu. How discriminating are your customers? If all they want is "salmon," you can serve whichever type of salmon is most cost-effective. But if they expect "fresh salmon," then that is what you will want to provide. Promising "fresh California King Salmon," of course, limits you to fresh King Salmon caught in California. You can decide how much control and flexibility you need.
4. Review your menu frequently. Check it against the actual items being served to be sure that they are identical. Once a description appears on your menu, it is up to you, the restaurateur, to insure that the product served is exactly as the menu describes it.
5. Train your staff so they can tell customers about individual menu items, including the species of fish used, whether it is fresh or frozen, and where it was caught.

Finfish Names

(the FDA "Fish List" with preferred California market names added if they differ from the FDA designation)

While the California seafood industry was working on a standardized nomenclature list for fish and seafood within that state, the FDA and the NMFS were busy compiling one (finfish only) for national use.

The draft FDA list (released early in 1989) included scientific and common names -- compiled from a number of published reference materials -- and approved market names for interstate commerce -- determined by common usage in the U.S. marketplace as well as input from NMFS and FDA -- as well as a number of regional names. The regional names are not approved for interstate commerce by the FDA.

The California Fisheries and Seafood Institute review panel decided to use this list as a basis for its California list, with an added "California Names" column. The names found here have been selected by the California seafood industry as most appropriate for use within the state of California. When no name appears in this column for a particular species, or when seafood is sold for use outside California, the FDA-approved market name or common name should be used.

A Glossary of Product and Preparation Forms

Amandine	French term meaning garnished with almonds.	Cloppino	A seafood stew said to have originated with Portuguese fishermen in California. Often made with both fish and shellfish in a tomato sauce with green pepper, onions, garlic, red wine, and sometimes seasoned with basil and oregano.
Baccala	Italian name for dried Codfish. Also known as Bacalao.	Clam Chowder	New England or Boston Clam Chowder is made with a white sauce, while Manhattan Clam Chowder has a tomato base.
Bake	To cook by dry heat, as in an oven or under hot coals.	Claw	The claw of a crab or lobster, including the shell and meat.
Barbecue	To cook by direct action of dry heat, resulting from burning hard wood or charcoal or from units where gas or electricity heats lava stones.	Cleaned	Means fish has been fully eviscerated.
Bisque	Thick cream soup that may contain seafood such as lobster, shrimp or clam.	Coquille St. Jacques	Scallops cooked and served "in a scallop shell" with rich creamy white sauce.
Block	A section of a large dressed fish cut across, including skin and bone.	Croquette	A ball or cake which may include minced fish or shellfish rolled in batter or eggs and crumbs, then deepfried. Usually served with a sauce.
Boil	To cook fish or shellfish in rapidly boiling salted water.	Deepfried	Fried by immersing in deep boiling fat.
Boned	The primary bone frame has been removed, although some secondary bones may remain.	Deveined	The intestines have been removed from the tail of a shrimp or prawn.
Boneless	All or nearly all major and secondary bones have been removed.	Double Fillet	Fillets cut from both sides of the fish. The two pieces remain joined together at the back.
Bouillabaisse	A pungent seafood stew made with as many as seven different types of fish and shellfish, olive oil, tomatoes and flavorings such as saffron, garlic, herbs and white wine.	Drawn	Same as gutted or cleaned. Head and tail intact, commonly used for trout.
Braise	To first cook fish in oil to seal the outside flesh, then add liquid for the remaining cooking time.	Dressed	Head left on, with entrails removed, or cleaned, and gills may or may not be removed.
Brine	To preserve by treating with a brine or wet-salt solution.	Dried	Indicates that the product has been dehydrated by natural sun or air or mechanical means.
Broll	To cook by high direct overhead heat.	Fillet	Preferred spelling to differentiate from a meat cut. The portion of flesh cut lengthwise free of the backbone of the fish and from which fins, main bones and sometimes belly flaps have been removed. This does not mean that the piece is completely boneless. Can be with or without skin.
Butterfly	To split through the middle without completely separating, then spread to resemble a butterfly.	Fin	The meat-containing portion of the body of a shark, ray or skate.
Canned	Indicates that the product has been packaged in a sealed tin according to standardized, acceptable canning procedures.	Finger	Fish is filleted and skinned, then cut vertically across the grain into finger-length strips for deep frying.
Centercut	Taken from that portion of the fish past the pectoral fin to a point before the body narrows. When sliced out in one piece, it's commonly called a loin cut. Only used on very large fish, such as halibut, swordfish or salmon.
Ceviche	A South American appetizer in which raw seafood is marinated in lemon or lime juice.
Chunk	An equivalent piece of a smaller fish, such as a whole salmon tail.

Finnan Haddie	A popular Scottish dish of smoked haddock, usually baked in a cream sauce or simply creamed on toast. Terminology on a menu can also be Finnan Haddie Style Cod or Finnan Haddie Style Pollock.	Fry	Frequently called "deep-frying" and not to be confused with sauteing, stir-frying or pan frying. Fried foods are those which are immersed in hot fat, vegetable or animal, and cooked without contact with the cooking vessel. Most frying involves a batter or a dry coating of flour, cornmeal, etc. which seals in the flavors and juices and prevents absorption of excess fat.
Fish and Chips	English dish of deepfried fish fillets and potato slices.	Gefilte Fish	A dish of fish balls, popular in the Jewish and Polish cuisine, made from one or more white-fleshed, freshwater fish, such as a carp, pike or whitefish.
Flake	The term refers to the natural divisions or layers in the flesh of some fish and shellfish, such as tuna.	Geographic Origin	Grown, harvested, processed or packed at the location specified. Examples would be Maine Lobster, Idaho Trout, Monterey Squid, Australian Lobster.
Fletches	Half fillets of halibut or other large fish, made by separating the whole fillet along the seam parallel to the backbone.	Gravlax	A popular Swedish appetizer of pickled or marinated salmon.
Fresh	This term is currently subject to several interpretations, but it is of special importance to the seafood industry because of the high perishability of seafood and the consumer's strong association of the word "fresh" with quality and goodness. The term implies that the product is in good condition, with little or no microbiological decay, and that it is in a natural state with no preservatives (not previously canned, bottled, packaged, dried, processed or frozen). We recommend that the term be applied to products that exhibit good physical characteristics and that have not been preserved other than by limited chilling or refrigeration. When the word fresh precedes such words as baked, ground, made, roasted, etc., it must meet the definition of Freshly . Traditionally, in California fresh fish and shellfish are listed on menus, for instance, as Fresh Salmon or Fresh Sole . When the product has been previously frozen and thawed, it appears on the menu simply as Salmon or Sole . Because virtually no shrimp is sold fresh off the boat here in its raw, uncooked state, be sure you do not refer to any shrimp or prawn dish as Fresh Shrimp or Fresh Prawns . It is not necessary to say that they are cooked. Remember, however, if you also have a retail outlet, by law you must identify all fish and shellfish as either Fresh or Previously Frozen or Thawed .	Grilled	Seafood is cooked directly over a fire or direct heat while supported by a grill of parallel metal bars or wire. The heat source may be charcoal or wood, gas flame, or an electric heating element, and typically leaves a pattern of dark searing marks on the cooked fish.
		Gutted	Same as drawn or cleaned.
		Headless	Means fish or shellfish, especially shrimp, has had its head removed.
		Homemade	Prepared on the premises in a manner which involved more than heating and adding spices or flavoring to commercially processed foods.
		House Brand	The product is either prepared on the premises, commercially prepared to exclusive specifications, or it bears the establishment's label.
		In Season	Available as a fresh product in California.
		Individually Quick Frozen	Referred to as IQF in the trade, indicating individual pieces have been quick-frozen independently. This prevents them from sticking together and maintains better characteristics of the flesh.
		Just Caught	This term relating to time is too subjective and is not to be used in menus at all, as is the term "freshly caught".
Freshly	Denotes that the process was completed on the premises and that there is no deterioration in color, texture and bouquet. Examples would include ground coffee, ground meat, baked bread and pastry.	Kosher	Prepared or processed to meet the requirements of the Orthodox Jewish religion. The product is identified by the presence of Hebrew lettering or symbols on the tag, label or wrapping.
Frozen	A general term indicating that the fish has been hard-frozen to a temperature at or below 32 degrees F. using any kind of freezing process.

Kosher Style No religious significance.

Koulibiaka A rather large, strudel shaped pastry shell with creamy filling of fish, especially salmon. A Russian favorite.

Leg Indicates a whole leg with shell and meat intact.

Lox Smoked salmon. Served for breakfast with cream cheese and a water roll called a bagel, or as a first course or appetizer.

Marinated Indicates product has been cured in an acidic solution such as vinegar.

Meat Morsels of flesh taken from the body of a fish or a shellfish.

Oyster Sauce A concentrated sauce, used frequently in Oriental cookery, made from oysters cooked in soy sauce and brine.

Our Own See House Brand.

Oysters Rockefeller Dish of oysters broiled or baked on the half shell, topped with a mixture of chopped spinach, butter, herbs, seasonings, and bread crumbs.

Paella A dish with a rice base flavored with saffron to which such ingredients as shellfish, chicken, pork, ham, sausage, vegetables and seasonings (in any combination) have been added.

Pan Dressed Gutted, head could be on or off, scales removed, fins and tail may or may not be trimmed, and ready for the skillet.

Pan-fry To cook large pieces of fish quickly in a generous amount of fat.

Papillote Oiled or buttered parchment or paper, in which a fish is wrapped for cooking.

Patty Rounded portion formed from minced fish.

Poach To cook covered with a liquid that is just below the boiling point.

Portion A general term denoting an individual serving cut from a processed block of fish.

Portion Control A method of assuring a specific quantity. When portions are advertised in a menu, the product must meet the stated weight size prior to cooking.

Quick-Frozen Indicates a specific fast freezing process, one that does not break down the cell structure of the product.

Raw Not cooked.

Roast To cook in an oven with very little moisture.

Round Means the same as whole -- the entire fish just as it comes from the water.

Salted Preserved by any of various dry-salting processes.

Sashimi Japanese name for various kinds of raw seafood, sliced thin and accompanied by condiments.

Saute To cook rapidly in an open shallow pan with little fat over moderate to high heat.

Scaled Having the body scales removed.

Scallops Same as Slices but usually thinner, two or more per serving.

Scored Either a drawn or whole-dressed fish with a varying number of vertical cuts to expedite heat penetration.

Scrap The leftovers after a whole fish has been dressed or boned. These bones, head and tail make excellent fish stock for sauces or soups.

Shelled Removed from its original shell, such as lobster, shrimp or prawn meat.

Shucked Meat of a mollusk, such as the oyster, that has been removed from its shell.

Skinned Some fish, such as catfish and eels, are skinned rather than dressed. This means that only the outer layer of protective skin and scales has been removed.

Slices Sections of a large fillet or fletch, cut diagonally or perpendicular to the bone. Usually, thicker pieces yield one per serving.

Smoked Indicates that the product has been smoked lightly primarily to add color and flavor. Usually the product will also be coated with a liquid to enhance the smoke color and flavor.

Split Fish cut open lengthwise from gills to tail with internal organs and roe removed. Sometimes the head is also removed, but the backbone or spine may be left in. In the case of lobster and crab, the cut goes vertically to expose the meat.

Steak A slice up to 2 inches thick through the body of a dressed fish, including skin and bone.

Steamed Fish cooked in an enclosed vessel over boiling water, wine or an aromatic liquid, which is then discarded.

Stewed Fish cooked and served in liquids, without the initial dry-cooking step of braising.

Stick	A pre-formed portion of fish meat cut from a block in uniformly rectangular pieces.
Sunomono	Various Japanese dishes, including fish, prepared with vinegar and spices.
Surimi	Product made from minced fish flesh which can be made to appear and taste like crabmeat, scallops, and other fish products.
Sushi	Various Japanese dishes made with a rice base and various ingredients such as raw or cooked seafood.
Tail	Lower portion of a lobster or other crustacean, including the meat and shell.
Tempura	A Japanese dish of ingredients such as seafood, meat, chicken or vegetable dipped in a batter and deepfried.
Tenderized	Seafood, usually squid or abalone, is treated by pounding or running through a commercial machine to score or break down tissue.
Teriyaki	A Japanese dish made with fish or shellfish that has been marinated in soy sauce and other flavorings, then grilled on skewers or broiled.
Thawed	Indicates that the seafood has been previously frozen.
Timbale	A custard-like dish of seafood prepared in a drum-shaped mold.
Trimmed	Fins and tail have been removed.
Whole-Dressed	An entire fish which has been gutted, and gills removed. Head and fins are left intact.
Wing	The meat-containing portion of a ray or skate's body.
