1 INTRODUCTION

The Pelton Round Butte Hydroelectric Project ("the Project") is operated by Portland General Electric (PGE) and is licensed under the Federal Power Act to PGE and the Confederated Tribes of the Warm Springs Reservation of Oregon (the Confederated Tribes) as joint licensees. The Pelton Round Butte Hydroelectric Project Revised Biological Evaluation (2004 BE) was developed on April 22, 2004 and met the information requirements in the implementing regulations for Section 7 of the ESA by both United States Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS) and National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS). On June 21, 2005, Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) granted a new license for the Project (License no. 2030). Since the issuance of the license in 2005, the Project Description has been updated to include additional actions which may affect bull trout (Salvelinus confluentus) and steelhead (Oncorhynchus mykiss). Therefore, this Supplement to Pelton Round Butte Hydroelectric Project Revised Biological Evaluation (Supplement to the BE) will evaluate the potential effects of certain maintenance activities on bull trout and steelhead, their critical habitat, and Essential Fish Habitat. Bald eagles (Haliaeetus leucocephalus) were considered in the 2004 BE but, since that time, they were removed from the Federal List of Endangered and Threatened Wildlife within the lower 48 states (USFWS 2007) and are therefore not evaluated in this document.

1.1 Consultation History

On June 18, 2004, FERC, on behalf of the Joint Applicants, sent a letter requesting formal consultation with USFWS and NMFS pursuant to Section 7 of the Endangered Species Act (ESA) of 1973 (16 U.S.C. 1536 et seq.). This consultation was for the FERC relicensing of the Pelton Round Butte Hydroelectric Project, Commission No. 2030. Formal consultation was initiated when USFWS and NMFS received the request letter to each respective agency.

On July 13, 2004, the Pelton Round Butte Hydroelectric Project Relicensing Settlement Agreement (Settlement Agreement) was established between PGE, the Tribes, the U.S. Department of the Interior (DOI), through the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA), the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), and the United States Fish and Wildlife Service (USFWS); National Marine Fisheries Service (NOAA Fisheries); United States Forest Service (USFS); Oregon Department of Environmental Quality (ODEQ); Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife (ODFW); Oregon Water Resources Department (OWRD); Oregon Parks and Recreation Department (OPRD); Deschutes County, Oregon; Jefferson County, Oregon; City of Bend, Oregon; City of Madras, Oregon; City of Redmond, Oregon; Avion Water Company; American Rivers; Oregon Trout; The Native Fish Society; Trout Unlimited; and WaterWatch of Oregon.

USFWS issued a Biological Opinion (USFWS BO) for the Pelton Round Butte Hydroelectric Project, FERC No. 2030 (USFWS Reference No. 1-7-04-F-0045) on November 2, 2004. Within the BO, USFWS determined the 2004 BE met the information requirements set forth in the implementing regulations for Section 7 of the ESA (50 CFR 402.14[c]). USFWS determined the issuance of a new FERC license would not likely jeopardize the continued existence of bull trout and did not address designated critical habitat for the species which was not designated at the time. Critical habitat for bull trout was designated later that year, October 6, 2004.

NMFS issued a Biological Opinion (NMFS BO) for the Pelton Round Butte Hydroelectric Project, FERC No. 2030 (NOAA Fisheries Consultation No. 2004/00812) on February 1, 2005. NMFS determined the 2004 BE met the information requirements set forth in the implementing regulations for Section 7 of the ESA (50 CFR 402.14[c]). NMFS determined the issuance of a new FERC license would not likely jeopardize the continued existence of the Middle Columbia River steelhead. The NMFS BO did not address designated critical habitat for the species, which was not yet designated. National Marine Fisheries Service did conclude that the Proposed Action would adversely affect designated Essential Fish Habitat (EFH) for Chinook (Oncorhynchus tshawytscha) and coho salmon (Oncorhynchus kisutch).

On June 21, 2005, FERC approved the settlement agreement and issued a new license for Project No. 2030-036 for the Round Butte Development, Pelton Development, and the Reregulating Development.

NMFS issued an Addendum to the February 1, 2005 BO to permit incidental take of adult and juvenile Middle Columbia River steelhead from additional programs that were not included in the previous BO (i.e., the Large Wood Management Program, the Lower River Gravel Augmentation Program, and the Trout Creek Habitat Enhancement Project).

PGE has operated the Project under the USFWS BO, NMFS BO, and the NMFS BO Addendum since that time. They also operate under 401 certifications from both ODEQ and the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs' Water Control Board.

Per the Settlement agreement, a Fish Committee was established in 2005. The committee member organizations include PGE, the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs, ODFW, USFWS, NMFS, U.S. Bureau of Indian Affairs, U.S. Forest Service, U.S. Bureau of Land Management, Oregon Department of Environmental Quality, Trout Unlimited, Water Watch, American Rivers, Native Fish Society, and Freshwater Trust. The Fish Committee meets bimonthly to provide technical guidance and oversees PGE and the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs development and implementation of facility designs and operating and implementation plans, study plans, and reports.

Between November 1 to 5, 2021 a power generation outage and associated spillway release event occurred at the Round Butte Dam to replace a power tunnel drain valve. FERC was aware of the maintenance and did not require any permits or FERC approval. USFWS and NMFS provided technical assistance during this event.

On June 3, 2022, FERC designated PGE and the Confederated Tribes of the Warm Springs as its non-federal representative for purposes of consultation pursuant to Section 7 of the Endangered Species Act (ESA); in that capacity PGE is filing this Supplement to the BE for FERC's use in Section 7 consultation with USFWS and NMFS (collectively "the Services") with regard to maintenance activities not previously analyzed in the USFWS BO or the NMFS BO.

2 PROPOSED ACTION

2.1 Background

The Project is located on the Deschutes River in Jefferson County near Madras, Oregon. The Project consists of water releases from three dams that are in sequence on the Deschutes River in Oregon. Moving from downstream to upstream, the dams include Reregulating Dam, Pelton Dam, and Round Butte Dam. The 2004 BE, USFWS BO, and NMFS BO provide more detail about the Project and the various infrastructure components.

Each dam is associated with a reservoir and powerhouse: Reregulating Dam impounds Reregulating Reservoir, Pelton Dam impounds Lake Simtustus, and Round Butte Dam impounds Lake Billy Chinook. This document focuses on the Round Butte Dam, Lake Billy Chinook reservoir upstream of the dam, and Lake Simtustus downstream of the dam as these are the components of the Project that are relevant to this consultation. This document also considers water quality downstream of all the dams, which is regulated by ODEQ and Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs' Water Control Board 401 certifications.

2.2 Action Area

The Action Area is the same as the BE, which entails all geographic areas directly or indirectly affected by the protection, mitigation, and enhancement (PME) measures as described in the 2004 BE as well as Project operations. This area extends from the historical range of anadromous fish in the Deschutes River and its tributaries downstream to its confluence with the Columbia River. Historical range upstream of the Project includes the Metolius River drainage, the Deschutes River upstream to Big Fall, the Whychus Creek drainage, and the Crooked River and its tributaries upstream to Bowman Dam.

2.3 Round Butte Dam and Selective Water Withdrawal

The Round Butte Dam is the uppermost development of the Project at about River Mile (RM) 110. Round Butte Dam is an earthen structure roughly 440 feet (ft) high and 1,382 ft long. A spillway intake structure is located roughly 600 ft upstream of the dam crest and consists of a 30-ft-high by 36-ft-wide radial gate and an 1,800 ft-long, 21-ft diameter spill tunnel that discharges into the Round Butte tailrace. The powerhouse intake structure is located roughly 700 ft upstream of the dam crest. The top of the intake is located about 240 ft below the reservoir surface at maximum operating pool (1,945 ft msl).

Round Butte Dam is operated as a modified run-of-river peaking facility. Water is conveyed to the powerhouse through a 23-ft diameter, 1,425-ft-long tunnel, which terminates in a reinforced concrete-encased steel trifurcation consisting of three 14-ft diameter penstocks. The powerhouse contains three Francis-type turbines with a generating capacity of 324.1 megawatts. The dam impounds Lake Billy Chinook, a 4,000-surface-acre reservoir with a gross storage capacity of 535,000 acre-ft at maximum operating pool at elevation 1,945 ft msl, and a maximum depth of 400 ft. The reservoir backs up the Metolius River canyon 13 miles, the Deschutes River canyon roughly 9 miles, and the Crooked River canyon 7 miles. All water that is supplied to the powerhouse is screened to prevent fish entrainment.

When Round Butte Dam was built in 1964, it included a fish passage system to allow for fish migration but unforeseen changes in river currents and temperatures made it challenging for migrating fish to find the downstream passageway. Eventually, a hatchery was built below the dam to support the Chinook and steelhead populations and in December 2009 (discussed further in Section 4.5 Hatchery Supplementation) the Pelton Round Butte Selective Water Withdrawal project (SWW) was constructed in coordination with regulatory agencies. The SWW is a 273-ft underwater tower and fish collection facility built with the goal to restore salmon, steelhead, and bull trout downstream passage from the upper Deschutes, Metolius, and Crooked rivers to the Lower Deschutes River mainstem.

The structure modifies currents and temperature to mimic natural conditions and attract downstream migrating fish into the collection facility. Fish are sorted, appropriately sized fish are tagged, and young salmon and steelhead are trucked downstream of all three Project dams to continue migrating downstream. When these fish return as adults, the fish reaching the lowest dam are sorted and the salmon and steelhead are trucked and released upstream of the Round Butte Dam so they can access the upstream rivers to spawn.

Additionally, the SWW was built so that PGE can draw water from both the surface and the bottom of Lake Billy Chinook to allow more precise temperature control of the water downstream of Round Butte Dam to comply with the 401 certifications.

2.4 Supplement to Proposed Action

Various maintenance activities at Round Butte Dam, the SWW, and the hatchery will be needed throughout the remaining years of the FERC license that ends in 2055. Some maintenance activities include the need to deactivate the SWW temporarily, while releasing water through the spillway into Lake Simtustus to maintain regulated releases and temperature downstream. For the purposes of this document the use of the spillway in this manner is referred to as a “controlled spill event.”

Controlled spill events have the potential to adversely affect bull trout and steelhead, via entrainment into the spillway and Lake Simtustus, in a way that was not previously assessed in either of the BOs. Therefore, PGE is requesting formal consultation on the supplemental Proposed Action of using controlled spill events to facilitate necessary maintenance on components of the dam, SWW, and the hatchery.

Four types of controlled spill events have been identified for the purposes of this consultation and they are:

1. One-time exclusion net testing
2. One-time turbine dewatering testing
3. Long duration spill events
4. Short duration spill events

Each of these spill events are described in detail below.

2.4.1 One-time exclusion net testing

In November 2022, PGE will be testing a new exclusion net designed as a Conservation Measure for future spill events. The net will surround the spillway and will extend down to a depth of 100 ft to minimize fish entrainment into the spillway while limiting the potential for net failure.

PGE estimates that contractors would need at least two days of in-water work to deploy the net. Once the net is in place, PGE would deactivate the SWW and open the spillway gate for up to 2 days to test and observe the effectiveness of the net as a Conservation Measure to protect bull trout and steelhead.

If it is determined that the net is not functioning appropriately (i.e., not effectively excluding fish during spilling), then PGE will close the spillway within 8 hours.

2.4.2 One-time turbine dewatering test

Assuming the exclusion net is effective (see Section 2.4.1 One-Time Exclusion Net Testing above), the net would remain in place for the turbine test dewater in November/December 2022. With the net deployed, PGE would conduct a one-time spill event to test dewatering the turbines. Dewatering the turbines will eventually be needed as a precursor to future maintenance work to replace all three turbine shut-off valves (TSVs) in the hydroelectric facility (see Section 2.4.3 Long Duration Spill Events). Once the exclusion net is deployed, PGE would deactivate the SWW then open the spillway gate for up to 14 days to allow the turbines to dewater.

2.4.3 Long duration, controlled spills for maintenance

For the purposes of this consultation, a long-duration, controlled spill event is considered any event where PGE deploys the exclusion net, deactivates the SWW, and opens the spillway gate for one week or more to conduct major maintenance activities on the dam components, SWW, or hatchery. PGE has three planned maintenance needs in this category within the next decade, but they anticipate up to three other similar maintenance needs for the duration of the FERC license, which expires in 2055.

Replacement of the three TSVs in the facility would be the first and potentially the second long-duration, controlled spill(s) for maintenance. PGE hopes to minimize the duration and number of events for TSV replacement, but for the purposes of analyzing the potential effects of this activity, PGE assumes the replacements may require up to two events each of a four-month duration (October 1 through January 31).

The third identified need is replacement of the switchgear, which would require up to a one-month controlled spill event sometime between October 1 and January 31 of an unknown year in the future, but likely a different year than the TSV replacements.

Following these identified maintenance needs (TSV and switchgear replacements), PGE anticipates up to three more months of controlled spills for maintenance would be needed for the remaining duration of the FERC license between October 1 and January 31.

2.4.4 Short duration, controlled spills for maintenance

For the purposes of this document, a short-duration, controlled spill event for maintenance includes any event where PGE would open the spillway for less than 48 hours. These short-duration events would also occur in the work window of October 1 through January 31. PGE would not deploy the exclusion net for these events, because they are short in duration and the exclusion net is very time consuming and labor intensive to deploy. PGE anticipates up to 15 short-duration, controlled spill events for maintenance for the remainder of the FERC license. Examples of maintenance for these kinds of events, may include but are not limited to: outages for hatchery upgrades, SWW upgrades, spill gate tests, etc.

2.4.5 Conservation measures

The supplemental Proposed Action includes several important Conservation Measures (CMs) to avoid and minimize effects of deactivating the SWW and opening the spillway for exclusion net testing, turbine dewatering testing, and maintenance activities.

2.4.5.1 CM-1. Seasonal work window

All planned spillway events would be scheduled sometime between October 1 and January 31 to avoid the primary downstream migration periods of bull trout and steelhead. Limiting the work window to these months will reduce the risk of downstream-moving bull trout and steelhead becoming entrained in the spillway and Lake Simtustus. During the months of November, December, and January, PGE's 401 certification requires full surface water withdrawal; therefore, planned spill events would continue to draw from the surface and no change in water quality relative to existing conditions is expected. During the month of October, PGE is required to draw water deeper in the reservoir so any spillway events that occur in October would necessarily result in drawing water from the surface instead of deeper water.

2.4.5.2 CM-2. Exclusion net

PGE is currently designing and will be testing an exclusion net (see Section 2.4.1) that can be deployed to minimize bull trout and steelhead entrainment into the spillway and Lake Simtustus during the turbine dewatering test and any long-duration controlled spill event for maintenance. The net will extend 100 ft below the surface because a full depth net would be more likely to become entrained in the spillway at high velocity and most bull trout and steelhead swim at depths less than 100 ft (PGE and Blue Leaf Environmental, Inc. 2013).

2.4.5.3 CM-3. Temporary change in upstream passage release site

Under existing conditions, PGE traps fish migrating upstream in the Pelton Trap at the Reregulation Dam. Trapped bull trout adults/ subadults and steelhead adults originating from the upper basin or fish passage program are then transported and released in the forebay of Round Butte Dam below the thermocline. However, the usual release site is only about 2,500 ft to the southwest of the spillway intake. This release point would put the upstream migrating fish at risk of entrainment in the spillway and Lake Simtustus if they are released at the usual location while the spillway is open. Therefore, as a conservation measure, PGE would temporarily change the release site for upstream fish passage to a location at least 2 miles upstream of the spillway entrance for as long as the spillway is open for each testing or maintenance event.

2.4.5.4 CM-4. Temporary holding of fish in the SWW

Since an exclusion net will not be deployed prior to the short duration, controlled spill events for maintenance, PGE proposes to keep bull trout and steelhead (that would normally be returned to the forebay) in the SWW holding tanks for 48 hours prior to opening the spillway and during the time that the spillway is open. Fish that are held will be sorted by size and kept in holding tanks with a constant flow of cool freshwater. Once PGE closes the spillway gate, fish in the holding tanks will be released back to the forebay. PGE has previously held fish for 48 hours for radio-tagging studies or when PGE was unable to haul fish due to unforeseen issues (e.g., high winds) without incident.

2.4.5.5 CM-5. Monitoring plan

PGE will monitor total dissolved gases (TDG) in Lake Simtustus downstream of the Round Butte Dam spillway outlet per a monitoring plan which will be submitted to ODEQ. They will also provide the TDG monitoring plan to USFWS and NMFS.

2.4.5.6 CM-6. Visual monitoring

PGE will conduct daily visual monitoring in Lake Simtustus downstream of the Round Butte Dam spillway outlet for any dead or injured fish. Any injured or dead fish will be reported to the services as described in CM-7 Reporting. During the spilling event that occurred between November 1 and November 5, 2021, visual monitoring was conducted daily downstream between November 1 and November 6 to identify fish mortalities. No bull trout or steelhead were observed during these surveys (PGE 2021 – Fish incident report).

2.4.5.7 CM-7. Reporting

If a dead, injured, or sick bull trout or steelhead are observed, or an individual is observed in Lake Simtustus during visual surveys, then PGE will provide initial notification to the nearest USFWS and NMFS offices. If a mortality is found, biological material will be preserved so that PGE can carry out instructions provided by Law Enforcement.

3 STATUS OF THE SPECIES

3.1 Bull Trout

The status of bull trout was discussed in detail in the USFWS BO. Much of the text below derives from the USFWS BO with some updates from more recent best available science.

3.1.1 Physical description

Bull trout are long, slender fish with a large head and jaws relative to its body size. Bull trout coloration can be variable, but generally, the body's background color is gray infused with green. Bull trout found in lakes, such as Lake Billy Chinook, may be silvery grey. Bull trout typically have 15–19 gill rakers, 63–66 vertebrae, and 22–35 pyloric caeca. Bull trout have spotless fins with lower fins having white anterior borders. The spotless fin characteristic of bull trout is often used by fisheries agencies to help promote angler identification of bull trout versus other fish, such as brook trout (Salvelinus fontinalis) (Behnke 2002).

3.1.2 Distribution

3.1.2.1 General distribution

The historical range of the bull trout includes major river basins in the Pacific Northwest at about 41 to 60 degrees North latitude, from the southern limits in the McCloud River in northern California and the Jarbidge River in Nevada to the headwaters of the Yukon River in the Northwest Territories, Canada (Cavender 1978, Bond 1992). To the west, the bull trout's range includes Puget Sound, various coastal rivers of British Columbia, Canada, and southeast Alaska (Bond 1992). Bull trout occur in portions of the Columbia River and tributaries within the basin, including its headwaters in Montana and Canada. Bull trout also occur in the Klamath River basin of south-central Oregon. East of the Continental Divide, bull trout are found in the headwaters of the Saskatchewan River in Alberta and Montana, and in the MacKenzie River system in Alberta and British Columbia, Canada (Cavender 1978, Brewin et al. 1997). There is little change in the general distribution of bull trout since the late 1990s, and although they still occupy a wide distribution, bull trout have been extirpated from approximately 60% of their historical range (USFWS 2015a). Since the late 1990s, no known occupied areas have been extirpated (USFWS 2015a).

3.1.2.2 Distribution in the Action Area

The Action Area is located in the Coastal Recovery Unit for bull trout, which contains multiple currently occupied core areas. The Lower Deschutes River core area overlays the Action Area (USFWS 2015a). Bull trout are no longer present in the upper Deschutes River Basin, although the area was historically occupied and has potential to be re-established in the future (USFWS 2015a, 2015b, 2017). Within the Deschutes River Basin, adult and subadult bull trout currently utilize the Metolius River Basin, Lake Billy Chinook Reservoir, the Deschutes River from Lake Billy Chinook to Big Falls, the lower Crooked River upstream to Opal Springs Dam, lower Whychus Creek, the lower mainstem Deschutes River above Sherars Falls, and in the Shitike Creek and Warm Springs River (DBHCP 2020). The five extant populations within the Deschutes includes Shitike Creek, Warm Springs River, Whitewater River, Jefferson/Candle Creek complex, and the Jack/Canyon/Heising Spring complex populations, with the latter three collectively called the Metolius complex (PGE 2021, USFWS 2015b, DBHCP 2020, USFWS 2020). Spawning and rearing activity is not known to occur in the lower Deschutes River between Reregulating Dam and the Columbia River confluence (DBHCP 2020). The present and historic distribution of bull trout is depicted in Figure 1. This data is assumed to be current.

3.1.3 Listing history

On June 10, 1998, the USFWS issued a final rule listing the Columbia River and Klamath River populations of bull trout as threatened (63 FR 31647). This decision conferred full protection of the ESA on bull trout occurring in four northwestern states. The Jarbidge River population was listed as threatened on April 8, 1999 (64 FR 17110). The Coastal-Puget Sound and St. Mary-Belly River populations were listed as threatened on November 1, 1999 (64 FR 58910), which resulted in all bull trout in the coterminous United States being listed as threatened. On November 1, 1999, all five DPSs were combined into a single DPS (USFWS 2015a). The USFWS proposed to designate critical habitat for the bull trout on November 29, 2002 (67 FR 71235). The USFWS issued a final rule designating critical habitat for the bull trout for the Klamath River, Columbia River, Jarbidge River, Coastal Puget Sound, and Saint Mary-Belly River populations on September 26, 2005 (70 FR 56212) with revised designations on January 14, 2010 (75 FR 2270) and again on October 18, 2010 (75 FR 63898). Critical habitat for bull trout was revised by USFWS in 2010 and 144.7 miles (232.8 kilometers) of stream/shoreline within the Lower Deschutes River Unit was designated (USFWS 2010).

A nonessential experimental population (NEP) of bull trout was established in the Clackamas River Subbasin, Oregon on December 9, 2009 (74 FR 65045 and 65056). The Recovery Plan for the Coterminous United States Population of Bull Trout was finalized and made available September 30, 2015 (80 FR 58767 and 58768) (USFWS 2015a). The most recent 5-Year Review for bull trout was November 13, 2015 and the listing status remained threatened. A new 5-Year Review was initiated March 11, 2020 (85 FR 14240).

3.1.4 Recovery units

The 2015 Bull Trout Recovery Plan (USFWS 2015a) identifies six recovery units: the Coastal Recovery Unit, the Klamath Recovery Unit, the Mid-Columbia Recovery Unit, the Upper Snake Recovery Unit, the Columbia Headwaters Recovery Unit, and the Saint Mary Recovery Unit. The recovery units have significant genetic differences, are populations that are geographically isolated from each other, and show life-history differences (USFWS 2015a). In addition, if any one unit was extirpated it may result in a significant gap in the range of the species, loss of a unique ecological setting, and marked difference (USFWS 2015a). Major geographic regions within the Coastal Recovery Unit include the Puget Sound, Olympic Peninsula, and Lower Columbia River (USFWS 2015a).

Each recovery unit is further structured into multiple core areas, which watershed-based areas that contain one or more local populations (USFWS 2015a). There are 109 occupied core areas comprising over 600 local populations, 6 historically occupied but currently extirpated core areas, and 2 core areas where research is needed to understand their current presence (USFWS 2015a).

3.1.5 Life history

3.1.5.1 General life history

Bull trout exhibit both resident and migratory life-history strategies (Rieman and McIntyre 1993). Resident bull trout complete their entire life cycle in the tributary (or nearby) stream in which they spawn and rear. Migratory bull trout spawn in tributary streams where juvenile fish rear one to four years before migrating to either a lake (adfluvial form), river (fluvial form) (Fraleay and Shepard 1989, Goetz 1989), or in certain coastal areas, to saltwater (anadromous) (Cavender 1978, McPhail and Baxter 1996, WDFW et al. 1997). Either form may give rise to offspring exhibiting either resident or migratory behavior (Rieman and McIntyre 1993). The multiple life-history strategies found in bull trout populations represent important diversity (both spatial and genetic) that help protect these populations from environmental stochasticity.

The size and age of bull trout at maturity depends on the life-history strategy and habitat limitations. Resident fish tend to be smaller than migratory fish at maturity and produce fewer eggs (Fraley and Shepard 1989, Goetz 1989). Resident adults usually range from 150 to 300 millimeters (mm) (6 to 12 inches) total length (TL). Migratory adults however, having lived for several years in larger rivers or lakes feeding on other fish, grow to a much larger size and commonly reach 600 mm (24 inches) TL or more (Pratt 1985, Goetz 1989). Size differs little between life-history forms during their first years of life in headwater streams but diverges as migratory fish move into larger and more productive waters (Rieman and McIntyre 1993).

Ratliff (1992) reported that bull trout under 100 mm (4 inches) in length were generally only found in the vicinity of spawning areas, and that fish over 100 mm were found downstream in larger channels and reservoirs in the Metolius River Basin. Juvenile migrants in the Umatilla River were primarily 100–200 mm long (4–8 inches) in the spring and 200–300 mm long (8–12 inches) in October (Buchanan et al. 1997). The age at migration for juveniles is variable. Ratliff (1992) reported that most juveniles reached a size to migrate downstream at age 2 years, with some at ages 1 and 3 years. Pratt (1992) had similar findings for age-at-migration of juvenile bull trout from tributaries of the Flathead River. The seasonal timing of juvenile downstream migration appears similarly variable.

Bull trout normally reach sexual maturity in 4 to 7 years and may live longer than 12 years (Rieman and McIntyre 1993). Migratory individuals tend to reach sexual maturity at larger sizes compared to non-migratory or resident individuals (Dunham and Gallo 2008). The species is iteroparous (i.e., can spawn multiple times in their lifetime) and adults may spawn each year or in alternative years (Batt 1996). Repeat-spawning frequency and post-spawning mortality are not well-documented (Leathe and Graham 1982, Fraley and Shepard 1989, Pratt 1992, Rieman and McIntyre 1996) but post-spawn survival rates are believed to be high.

Bull trout typically spawn from late August to November during periods of decreasing water temperatures (below 9 degrees Celsius [ $^{\circ}\text{C}$ ]/48 degrees Fahrenheit [ $^{\circ}\text{F}$ ]). Redds are often constructed in stream reaches fed by springs or near other sources of cold groundwater (Goetz 1989, Pratt 1992, Rieman and McIntyre 1996). Migration of bull trout is related to both temperature and food availability. For example, cold temperatures that are suitable for egg incubation are cooler than optimal temperatures for growth (Dunham and Gallo 2008). Migratory bull trout frequently begin spawning migrations as early as April and have been known to migrate upstream as far as 250 kilometers (km) (155 miles) to spawning grounds in Montana (Fraley and Shepard 1989, Swanberg 1997). In Idaho, bull trout migrate 109 km (67.5 miles) from Arrowrock Reservoir to spawning areas in the headwaters of Boise River (Flatter 1998). In the Blackfoot River, Montana, bull trout began spring spawning migration in response to increasing temperatures (Swanberg 1997). Depending on water temperature, egg incubation is normally 100 to 145 days (Pratt 1992), and after hatching, juveniles remain in the substrate. Time from egg deposition to emergence of fry may surpass 220 days. Fry normally emerge from early April through may, depending on water temperatures and increasing stream flows (Pratt 1992, Ratliff and Howell 1992).

Bull trout are opportunistic feeders, with food primarily a function of size and life-history strategy. Resident and juvenile migratory bull trout prey on terrestrial and aquatic insects, macrozooplankton, and small fish (Boag 1987, Goetz 1989, Donald and Alger 1993). Adult migratory bull trout feed on various fish species including other bull trout and salmonids (Leathe and Graham 1982, Fraley and Shepard 1989, Brown 1992, Donald and Alger 1993, Dunham et al. 2008). In coastal areas of western Washington, bull trout feed on Pacific herring (Clupea pallasii), Pacific sand lance (Ammodytes hexapterus), and surf smelt (Hypomesus pretiosus) in the ocean (WDFW et al. 1997).

3.1.5.2 Life history in the Action Area

Within the Deschutes River basin, most bull trout begin migrating upstream in May and June and return to mainstem rivers and lakes to spawn in November or December, possibly avoiding elevated summertime water temperatures and potentially insufficient water levels (USFWS 2020). Monthly capture records for bull trout migrating upstream at the Pelton Trap is included in Table 1 (PGE 2021, 2022). Bull trout spawning areas are found in the Metolius River subbasin, Warm Springs River, and Shitike Creek (Marx 2003, as cited in the DBHCP 2020). Adult adfluvial bull trout generally spend approximately November through June in lakes such as Lake Billy Chinook where they forage in the shallows (USFWS 2020). Spawning usually occurs between September and November (DBHCP 2020). Fry may take up to 225 days to emerge from the gravel (DBHCP 2020). Bull trout usually reach sexual maturity in 4 to 7 years (Johnston et al. 2007 as cited in DBHCP 2020).

The quantity of bull trout captured in the SWW (i.e., migrating downstream) between 2010 and 2019/2021, total counts per month, average counts per month, and average daily counts are shown in Table 2. The majority are captured in April and May (PGE 2022, Appendix A), but juvenile outmigration generally occurs between March and June (PGE 2022, PGE unpubl. data). Table 3 summarizes the life-history timing of bull trout in the Deschutes River basin.

3.1.6 Habitat

Habitat components that influence bull trout distribution and abundance include water temperature, cover, channel form and stability, valley form, spawning and rearing substrate, and availability of migratory corridors (Fraley and Shepard 1989; Goetz 1989; Hoelscher and Bjornn 1989; Sedell and Everest 1991; Howell and Buchanan 1992; Pratt 1992; Rieman and McIntyre 1993, 1995; Rich 1996; Watson and Hillman 1997). Watson and Hillman (1997) concluded that watersheds must have specific physical characteristics to provide the habitat requirements necessary for bull trout to successfully spawn and rear. Because bull trout exhibit a patchy distribution even in pristine habitats (Rieman and McIntyre 1993), they are not expected to simultaneously occupy all available habitats (Rieman et al. 1997).

Bull trout are found primarily in cold streams, although individual fish are found in larger, warmer river systems throughout the Columbia River basin (Fraley and Shepard 1989; Rieman and McIntyre 1993, 1995; Buchanan and Gregory 1997; Rieman et al. 1997). Temperatures above 15–16°C are thought to be limiting to growth and survival and temperatures above 20°C are lethal for bull trout (Buchanan and Gregory 1997, Selong et al. 2001, Dunham et al. 2003).

Spawning areas are often associated with cold-water springs, groundwater infiltration, and the streams with the coldest summer water temperatures in a given watershed (Pratt 1992, Rieman and McIntyre 1993, Rieman et al. 1997, Baxter et al. 1999). Water temperatures during spawning generally range from 5 to 9°C (41 to 48°F) (Goetz 1989). The requirement for cold water during egg incubation has generally limited the spawning distribution of bull trout to high elevations in areas where the summer climate is warm. Rieman and McIntyre (1995) found in the Boise River Basin that no juvenile bull trout were present in streams below 1,613 meters (5,000 ft). Similarly, in the Sprague River basin of south-central Oregon, Ziller (1992) found in four streams that: “numbers of bull trout increased and numbers of other trout species decreased as elevation increased. In those streams, bull trout were only found at elevations from 1,774 meters (5,500 ft).”

Optimal temperatures for rearing bull trout have been reported between 4–10°C (Buchanan and Gregory 1997, Dunham et al. 2003), but in other studies, peak growth has been reported at temperatures as high as 13°C (Selong et al. 2001). Goetz (1989) suggested optimum water temperatures for egg incubation of 2 to 4°C (35 to 39°F). For Granite Creek, Idaho, Bonneau and Scarnecchia (1996) observed that juvenile bull trout selected the coldest water of 8 to 9°C (46 to 48°F), within a temperature gradient of 8 to 15°C (46 to 60°F) available in a plunge pool.

In Nevada, adult bull trout have been collected at sites with water temperature of 17.2°C (63°F) in the West Ford of the Jarbidge River and have been observed in Dave Creek where maximum daily water temperatures were 17.1 to 17.5°C (62.8 to 63.6 °F) (Munz et al. 2011). In the Little Lost River, Idaho, bull trout have been collected in water temperatures up to 20°C (68°F); however, these fish made up less than 50% of salmonids when maximum summer water temperature exceeded 15°C (59°F) and less than 10% of all salmonids when temperature exceeded 17°C (63°F) (Gamett 1999).

All life-history stages of bull trout are associated with complex forms of cover, including large woody debris, undercut banks, boulders, and pools (Fraley and Shepard 1989, Goetz 1989, Hoelscher and Bjornn 1989, Sedell and Everest 1991, Pratt 1992, Thomas 1992, Rich 1996, Sexauer and James 1997, Watson and Hillman 1997). Jakober (1995) observed bull trout overwintering in deep beaver ponds or pools containing large woody debris in the Bitterroot River drainage, Montana, and suggested that, because of the need to avoid anchor ice in order to survive, suitable winter habitat may be more restricted than summer habitat. Maintaining bull trout habitat requires stability of stream channels and of flow (Rieman and McIntyre 1993). Juvenile and adult bull trout frequently inhabit side channels, stream margins, and pools with suitable cover (Sexauer and James 1997). These areas are sensitive to activities that directly or indirectly affect stream channel stability and alter natural flow patterns. For example, altered stream flow in the fall may disrupt bull trout during the spawning period, and channel instability may decrease survival of eggs and young juveniles in the gravel from winter through spring (Fraley and Shepard 1989, Pratt and Huston 1993).

Preferred bull trout spawning habitat consists of low-gradient stream reaches with loose, clean gravel (Fraley and Shepard 1989). In the Swan River, Montana, abundance of bull trout redds (spawning areas) were positively correlated with the extent of bounded alluvial valley reaches, which are likely areas of groundwater to surface water exchange (Baxter et al. 1999). Survival of bull trout embryos planted in stream areas of groundwater upwelling used by bull trout for spawning were significantly higher than embryos planted in areas of surface water recharge not used by bull trout for spawning (Baxter and McPhail 1999). Pratt (1992) indicated that increases in fine sediment reduced egg survival and emergence.

Migratory corridors link seasonal habitats for all bull trout life-history forms. For example, in Montana, migratory bull trout make extensive migrations in the Flathead River system (Fraley and Shepard 1989), and resident bull trout in tributaries of the Bitterroot River migrate downstream to overwinter in tributary pools (Jakober 1995). The ability to migrate is important to the persistence of bull trout (Rieman and McIntyre 1993, Rieman et al. 1997). Migrations facilitate gene flow among local populations when individuals from different local populations interbreed, or stray, to non-natal streams. Local bull trout populations that are extirpated may become re-established by migrants.

3.1.7 Population

3.1.7.1 General population dynamics

Although bull trout are widely distributed over a large geographic area, they exhibit patchy distribution, even in pristine habitats (Rieman and McIntyre 1993). Increased habitat fragmentation reduces the amount of available habitat and increases isolation from other populations of the same species (Saunders et al. 1991). Burkey (1989) concluded that when species are isolated by fragmented habitats, low rates of population growth are typical in local populations and their probability of extinction is directly related to the degree of isolation and fragmentation. Without sufficient immigration, growth for local populations may be low and probability of extinction high (Burkey 1989, 1995).

Metapopulation concepts of conservation biology theory have been suggested relative to the distribution and characteristics of bull trout, although empirical evidence is limited (Rieman and McIntyre 1993, Dunham and Rieman 1999, Rieman and Dunham 2000). A metapopulation is an interacting network of local populations with varying frequencies of migration and gene flow among them (Meffe and Carroll 1994). For inland bull trout, metapopulation theory is likely most applicable at the watershed scale where habitat consists of discrete patches or collections of habitat capable of supporting local populations; local populations are for the most part independent and represent discrete reproductive units; and long-term, low-rate dispersal patterns among component populations influences the persistence of at least some of the local populations (Rieman and Dunham 2000). Ideally, multiple local populations distributed throughout a watershed provide a mechanism for minimizing extirpation risk because the simultaneous loss of all local populations is unlikely. However, habitat alteration, primarily through the construction of impoundments, dams, and water diversions has fragmented habitats, eliminated or partially eliminated migratory corridors, and in many cases isolated bull trout in the headwaters of tributaries (Rieman et al. 1997, Dunham and Rieman 1999, Spruell et al. 1999, Rieman and Dunham 2000).

Accordingly, human-induced factors as well as natural factors affecting bull trout distribution have likely limited the expression of the metapopulation concept for bull trout to patches of habitat within the overall distribution of the species (Dunham and Rieman 1999). However, despite the theoretical fit, the relatively recent and brief time period during which bull trout investigations have taken place does not provide certainty as to whether a metapopulation dynamic is occurring (e.g., a balance between local extirpations and recolonizations) across the range of bull trout or whether the persistence of bull trout in large or closely interconnected habitat patches (Dunham and Rieman 1999) is simply reflective of a general deterministic trend towards extinction of the species where the larger or interconnected patches are relics of historically wider distribution (Rieman and Dunham 2000). Research by Whiteley et al. (2003) does, however, provide stronger genetic evidence for the presence of a metapopulation process for bull trout, at least in the Boise River basin of Idaho.

3.1.7.2 Population trends in the Action Area

As a whole, the Lower Deschutes River core area contains an abundant and stable population of bull trout (USFWS 2015b). This core area is considered a population stronghold and has been used to re-establish the Clackamas River population (USFWS 2015b, 2018). The Lower Deschutes River core area is one of the most stable and abundant populations within the Coastal Recovery Unit (USFWS 2015b). There are no primary habitat threats to bull trout listed in the Coastal Recovery Unit Implementation Plan for Bull Trout within the Lower Deschutes River core area (USFWS 2015b).

All populations besides the Whitewater (i.e., the Warm Springs, Shitike, Jefferson/Candle Complex, and the Jack/Canyon/Heising Spring Complex populations) are estimated to contain greater than 100 adults and are not at a risk of inbreeding (PGE 2021). The Whitewater population is estimated to be between 0 and 60 adults (PGE 2021) and the population density is thought to be low (USFWS 2020). The Jack Complex population is thought to be the largest with approximately 700 adults present (PGE 2021). The Warm Springs River population is thought to be stable and the Jack and Jefferson complexes in addition to Shitike Creek populations are thought to be increasing (PGE 2021). Capture records for bull trout migrating upstream at the Pelton Trap by run year is included in Table 4 (PGE 2021, 2022).

Since the Opal Dam fish ladder was installed in 2019, over 200 bull trout have been observed migrating upstream into the Crooked River basin (USFWS 2020).

Redd surveys have been conducted annually in the Metolius River subbasin since 1986 (USFWS 2020). Redd counts increased between 1987 and 2004, in 2008 redd counts declined, then began to rebound again in 2010 (USFWS 2020). Although the Warm Springs River and Shitike Creek populations are much smaller than those in the Metolius complex, all the populations support spawning and rearing (USFWS 2020). Bull trout captures at Pelton Trap have been increasing on average between 2014 and 2021 (Table 4).

Table 4. Capture records for bull trout migrating upstream at the Pelton Trap by calendar year (PGE 2022). Calendar year annual return numbers in this table are not indicative of actual annual run sizes since steelhead runs are tallied over a one-year period that extends from June 1 of one year to May 30 of the next year.

3.1.8 Reasons for listing

Bull trout populations were historically depressed due to degraded habitat (e.g., land and water management activities impacted habitat, infrastructure that limited passage and water quality impacts) and the introduction of nonnative species (USFWS 2002). The recovery goal is to, “ensure the long-term persistence of self-sustaining complex interacting groups of bull trout distributed throughout the species’ native range, so that the species can be delisted” (USFWS 2002).

3.1.9 Rangewide trend

At the time the recovery plan was finalized, Bull trout were found to be stable overall and range-wide, with some core area populations increasing, some stable, and some decreasing (USFWS 2015a).

3.1.10 New threats

The most significant, current impacts to bull trout populations are identified as historical habitat loss and fragmentation, interaction with nonnative species, and fish passage issues (USFWS 2015a). Depending on the location, the type and level of threat to bull trout varies significantly. In some locations, bull trout may experience no major threats and maintain healthy populations in all available habitat, may experience limited but significant threats while retaining strong populations, or may continue to experience severe and systemic threats and reduced populations (USFWS 2015a). Spring and summer climates, drought, wildfire, and the severity of predicted snowpack loss are also threats to the species (Mote et al. 2005; Pederson et al. 2013; Littell et al. 2009; Littell et al. 2010, as cited in DBHCP 2020). Bull trout are especially vulnerable to climate change given some populations are constrained in locations and the species requires cold temperatures (USFWS 2020).

3.1.11 Conservation needs

In 2015, USFWS completed the final recovery plan for the coterminous US population of bull trout. The recovery plan contains recommendations for recovering the Coastal Recovery Unit in the Deschutes River Basin. The Coastal Recovery Unit is split into core areas. Within the Coastal Recovery Unit, there is one core area that is within the Action Area: the Lower Deschutes River.

3.2 Middle Columbia River Steelhead

3.2.1 Physical description

Steelhead are a long, slender fish with a large mouth. Steelhead can reach sizes from 35–65 cm fork length. Steelhead coloration can be variable, but generally, the body's color is silvery with numerous black spots on the back, dorsal fin, adipose fin, and tail with an iridescent pink-to-red lateral band. Steelhead typically have 10–12 principal rays on the dorsal fin, 16–22 gill rakers on each arch and 9–13 branchiostegal rays, and a slightly forked tail (Moyle 2002). Juvenile coloration is similar to adults with the exception of 5–13 oval parr marks on the lateral line. During the process of smotification, juveniles develop a silvery appearance.

3.2.2 Distribution

3.2.2.1 General distribution

The Middle Columbia River (MCR) steelhead DPS includes all naturally spawned anadromous O. mykiss (steelhead) originating below natural and manmade impassable barriers from the Columbia River and its tributaries upstream of the Wind and Hood Rivers (exclusive) to and including the Yakima River and excludes such fish originating from the Snake River basin. This DPS does include steelhead from seven artificial propagation programs: the Touchet River Endemic Program; Yakima River Kelt Reconditioning Program (in Status Creek, Toppenish Creeks, Naches River, and Upper Yakima River); Umatilla River Program (ODFW Stock #91); and the Deschutes River Program (ODFW Stock #66). This DPS does not include steelhead that are designated as part of an experimental population (79 FR 20802).

For recovery planning and development of recovery criteria, the Interior Columbia Technical Recovery Team (ICTRT) identified independent populations within the MCR steelhead DPS, and grouped them into genetically similar major population groups (MPGs) (ICTRT 2003). The DPS is composed of four MPGs: Cascades Eastern Slope Tributaries, John Day River, Yakima River, and the Walla Walla and Umatilla Rivers.

3.2.2.2 Distribution in the Action Area

The Middle Columbia steelhead population within the Deschutes River watershed are split into the Deschutes River Eastside and Deschutes River Westside populations (NMFS 2009). The Deschutes River Eastside population includes the mainstem Deschutes River from its mouth to the confluence of Trout Creek and tributaries entering the mainstem from the east, including Buck Hollow, Bakeoven, and Trout Creeks. The Deschutes River Westside population includes the mainstem Deschutes River upstream from the confluence with Trout Creek and tributaries to the west of the mainstem. Steelhead currently have access to the mainstem Deschutes up to Pelton Dam and Buck Hollow, Bakeoven, Trout creeks in addition to Warm Springs River, Shitike Creek and several other tributaries (NMFS 2009).

Steelhead have access to the mainstem Deschutes River from the Pelton Reregulating Dam downstream to the confluence with the Columbia River (DBHCP 2020). The upper Deschutes River Westside and Crooked River populations (upstream of Pelton Dam) are extirpated and efforts to reintroduce steelhead smolts and fry in this area are ongoing (NMFS 2009, 2016). Outplants of fry from the Round Butte hatchery stock are planted in Whychus Creek, Crooked River, and the Deschutes River above Pelton Round Butte (NMFS 2016). Adult steelhead from the program have been observed returning between 2011 and 2019 (NMFS 2016, PGE and CTWS 2021). The lower Deschutes River downstream of Reregulating Dam serves as spawning habitat, rearing habitat, and a migratory corridor for MCR steelhead (NMFS 2005). Figure 2 shows the historic and current distribution of steelhead in the Deschutes River basin.

3.2.3 Listing history

The MCR steelhead population was listed as threatened on March 25, 1999 (64 FR 14517). On July 10, 2000, NOAA Fisheries adopted 4(d) regulations for threatened salmonids that prohibit take except in specific circumstances. The 4(d) regulations were updated June 28, 2005 (70 FR 37160). The Critical habitat for MCR steelhead was designated in 2005. All MCR steelhead below the Pelton Round Butte Dam receive protections afforded to fish listed under the ESA, regardless of their natal origins (DBHCP 2020).

In 2006, NMFS issued a final determination to list the Middle Columbia River DPS (previously Evolutionary Significant Unit or ESU) as threatened (NMFS 2006). NMFS updated the ruling on the Middle Columbia River DPS to include, “Naturally spawned anadromous O. mykiss (steelhead) originating below natural and manmade impassable barriers from the Columbia River and its tributaries upstream of the Wind and Hood Rivers (exclusive) to and including the Yakima River; excludes such fish originating from the Snake River basin. This DPS does include steelhead from seven artificial propagation programs: the Touchet River Endemic Program; Yakima River Kelt Reconditioning Program (in Satus Creek, Toppenish Creek, Naches River, and Upper Yakima River); Umatilla River Program (ODFW Stock #91); and the Deschutes River Program (ODFW Stock #66). This DPS does not include steelhead that are designated as part of an experimental population” (NMFS 2014).

3.2.4 Life history

3.2.4.1 General life history

Steelhead is commonly applied to anadromous (migratory) form of the species Oncorhynchus mykiss whereas the non-anadromous form is referred to as the resident form (NMFS 2009). Steelhead can be divided into two basic run types based on the level of sexual maturity at the time of river entry and the duration of the spawning migration (Burgner et al. 1992). The stream-maturing type, or summer steelhead, enters freshwater in a sexually immature condition and requires several months in freshwater to mature and spawn. The ocean-maturing type, or winter steelhead, enters freshwater with well-developed gonads and spawns shortly after river entry (Barnhart 1986). Variations in migration timing exist between populations. Some river basins have both summer and winter steelhead, whereas others only have one run type.

In the Pacific Northwest, summer steelhead enter freshwater between May and October (Busby et al. 1996, Nickelson et al. 1992). During summer and fall, before spawning, they hold in cool, deep pools (Nickelson et al. 1992). They migrate inland toward spawning areas, overwinter in the larger rivers, resume migration to natal streams in early spring, and then spawn (Meehan and Bjornn 1991, Nickelson et al. 1992). Winter steelhead enter freshwater between November and April in the Pacific Northwest (Busby et al. 1996, Nickelson et al. 1992), migrate to spawning areas, and then spawn in late winter or spring. Some adults do not, however, enter coastal streams until spring, just before spawning (Meehan and Bjornn 1991). Difficult field conditions (snowmelt and high stream flows) and the remoteness of spawning grounds contribute to the relative lack of specific information on steelhead spawning.

Unlike Pacific salmon, steelhead are iteroparous, or capable of spawning more than once before death. However, it is rare for steelhead to spawn more than twice before dying, and most that do so are females (Nickelson et al. 1992). Iteroparity is more common among southern steelhead populations than northern populations (Busby et al. 1996). Multiple spawnings for steelhead range from 3% to 20% of runs in Oregon coastal streams.

Steelhead spawn in cool, clear streams with suitable gravel size, depth, and current velocity. Intermittent streams may also be used for spawning (Barnhart 1986, Everest 1973). Steelhead enter streams and arrive at spawning grounds weeks or even months before they spawn and are vulnerable to disturbance and predation. Cover, in the form of overhanging vegetation, undercut banks, submerged vegetation, submerged objects such as logs and rocks, floating debris, deep water, turbulence, and turbidity (Giger 1973), is required to reduce disturbance and predation of spawning steelhead. Summer steelhead usually spawn further upstream than winter steelhead (Withler 1966, Behnke 1992).

Depending on water temperature, steelhead eggs may incubate for 1.5 to 4 months (August 9, 1996, 61 FR 41542) before hatching. Summer rearing takes place primarily in the faster parts of pools, although young-of-the-year are abundant in glides and riffles. Winter rearing occurs more uniformly at lower densities across a wide range of fast and slow habitat types. Productive steelhead habitat is characterized by complexity, primarily in the form of large and small wood.

3.2.4.2 Life history in the Action Area

Deschutes River steelhead are summer-run and returning adults migrate 9–10 months prior to spawning and migrate up the Deschutes River from June through October (DBHCP 2020). Juveniles rear in freshwater between one and four years prior to emigration (DBHCP 2020). Deschutes River steelhead spawn from about the middle of March to the end of May (DBHCP 2020). Spawning in the eastside tributaries (e.g., Trout Creek) has evolved to an earlier time (January through mid-April) than the westside tributaries or mainstem Deschutes River due to decreased flows earlier in the season (DBHCP 2020). Juveniles rear in freshwater between one and four years prior to emigration (DBHCP 2020). The quantity of steelhead captured in the SWW throughout the years between 2010 and 2019/2021 (i.e., individuals migrating downstream), total counts per month, average counts per month, and average daily counts are shown in Table 5. The majority are captured in May and June, but downstream migration generally occurs between April and mid-June (Table 5; PGE 2022, unpubl. data).

Steelhead do not spawn or rear in Lake Billy Chinook, but returning adults use the reservoir to continue their upstream migration to the upper arms of the reservoir where they hold until early March (DBHCP 2020). The timing of summer steelhead life-history events in the Deschutes River basin is shown in Table 6.

3.2.5 Steelhead temperature tolerances

Steelhead are found primarily in cool streams throughout the Columbia River basin (NMFS 2009). Temperatures above 15–16°C are thought to be limiting to growth and survival and temperatures above 25°C can be lethal for steelhead depending on the exposure period (NMFS 2009, Richter & Kolmes 2006, McCullough et al. 2001).

The thermal temperature barrier for adult migration has been observed above 21°C (Richter & Kolmes 2006). In a hatchery methodology reference, Leitritz and Lewis (1976) described observations that pre-spawning adults held at water temperatures below 13.3°C do not impact egg development in rainbow trout broodstock; however, there was no further information or citations to support this claim. The optimum temperatures for steelhead spawning range from 4 to 12°C (McEwan and Jackson 1996, IEP Steelhead Project Work Team, no date). Bell (1986) suggested optimum water temperatures for egg incubation of 8 to 11.1°C. Optimal temperatures for rearing steelhead have been reported up to about 15°C (NMFS 2000, 2009; Myrick and Cech 2000, 2001; Richter & Kolmes 2006) with stressful conditions above 15°C and lethal temperatures above 25°C (Myrick and Cech 2001, FERC 1993).

3.2.6 Population

3.2.6.1 General population dynamics

Like other species of Pacific salmon, steelhead display a high degree of natal site fidelity, but some amount of straying (4–14%) occurs (Keefer and Caudill 2014), which is an important strategy to maintain genetic diversity between populations and for colonizing new habitats. Due to the high natal site fidelity, steelhead typically exhibit a metapopulation structure (Schtickzelle and Quinn 2007; McElhany et al. 2000, as cited in NMFS 2016). Rather than interbreeding as a large group, ESUs and DPSs function as demographically separate populations divided by regions of unsuitable spawning habitat (NMFS 2016).

Resident and anadromous life-history forms are capable of interbreeding and both are important for maintaining viable populations. The anadromous life history form typically contributes disproportionately to reproductive fitness of a population due to higher fecundity of anadromous females, which may be why a larger proportion of anadromous individuals are females compared to males. However, in the Deschutes River, Oregon, the resident life history form is more abundant than the anadromous form, which is thought to be related to rapid growth in fresh water allowing residents to reach larger size at maturation, in addition to a high level of iteroparity of residents (Schroeder and Smith 1989, Zimmerman and Ratliff 2003, Howell et al. 1985). Indeed, repeat spawning can be an important contributor to population dynamics, but the rates of repeat spawning are highly variable.

Hatchery fish can also influence population dynamics. Hatchery fish tend to have higher straying rates compared to wild fish (Keefer and Caudill 2014), and thus mixing of genetics between hatchery and wild fish is a major concern for managers because offspring of hatchery-produced salmon may be less viable (Quinn 1993). Estimates of hatchery straying into MCR Steelhead populations indicate hatchery fish could account for as much as 70% of the population (BOR 2003).

3.2.6.2 Population trends in the Action Area

The ICTRT split the MCR Steelhead DPS into Major Population Groups (MPGs) based on various genetic and geographic considerations (NMFS 2009). The Deschutes East, Deschutes West, and Crooked River portions of the Deschutes River basin (i.e., the Action Area) are wholly within the Cascade Eastern Slope Tributaries MPG (NMFS 2009).

At the time of NMFS (2009), the Deschutes River East population size was considered intermediate and viable and the Deschutes River West population was considered large, but was considered at high risk of extinction within 100 years because of habitat constraints attributed to Pelton Dam (NMFS 2009).

Between 1999 and 2020, the number of hatchery (which may include fish released from other hatchery programs) and natural origin steelhead returns at the Pelton Fish Trap ranged from 1,189 (in 2019) to 8,897 (in 2001, Figure 3, PGE 2021). The average number of fish trapped between 2016 and 2020 was lower than the long-term average from 1999 to 2020 (1,820 and 3,639, respectively, PGE 2021). However, smolts captured at Round Butte Dam have increased on average between 2010 to 2021 (Table 7).

Capture records for steelhead migrating upstream at the Pelton Trap by run year are included in Table 8 (PGE 2021, 2022).

3.2.7 Hatcheries

Hatchery fish are widespread and often stray to spawn naturally throughout the region. Estimates of the proportion of natural spawners of hatchery origin range from low (Yakima, Walla Walla, and John Day rivers) to moderate (Umatilla and Deschutes rivers). Most hatchery production in this ESU is derived primarily from within-basin stocks. One area of concern is the increase in the number of Snake River hatchery (and possibly wild) steelhead that stray and spawn naturally within the Deschutes River Basin. Studies have been proposed to evaluate hatchery programs within the Snake River Basin that experience high rates of straying into the Deschutes River and to make needed changes to minimize such straying to rivers within the MCR steelhead ESU. Out of basin stray rates have declined in the Deschutes basin since the 2004 BE (ODFW 2016).

3.2.8 Reasons for listing

Steelhead populations were historically depressed due to degraded habitat (e.g., land and water management activities-impacted habitat, infrastructure that limited passage, water quality impacts) (NMFS 2006). The recovery goal is to, “have all four major population groups at viable (low risk) status with representation of all the major life history strategies present historically, and with the abundance, productivity spatial structure, and diversity attributes required for long-term persistence” (NMFS 2016).

3.2.9 Rangewide trend

The most recent 2016 Five-Year Review for the MCR steelhead reported that two of the four MPGs in the DPS increased modestly relative to the levels reported in the prior 2010–2011 Five-Year Review. Abundance estimates for 2 of 3 populations with sufficient data in the remaining two MPGs were marginally lower. Natural-origin spawning estimates are highly variable relative to minimum abundance thresholds across the populations in the DPS. Three of the four MPGs in this DPS include at least one population rated at low risk for abundance and productivity. The survival gaps for the remaining populations are generally smaller than those for the other Interior Columbia River Basin listed DPSs. Information at the time of the Five-Year Review indicated that stray levels into the John Day River populations had decreased. Out-of-basin hatchery stray proportions, although reduced, remained high in spawning reaches within the Deschutes River basin populations. In general, the majority of population level viability ratings remained unchanged from prior reviews for each MPG within the DPS (NWFSC 2015).

3.2.10 Limiting factors and threats

Within the Conservation and Recovery Plan for Oregon, threats to steelhead populations in the Middle Columbia River Steelhead DPS, defined as human actions or natural events, cause or contribute to limiting factors, which are defined and identified separately as physical, biological, or chemical conditions within the environment that influence viable salmonid populations (Carmichael 2010). Major limiting factors for the steelhead populations in the Deschutes River Basin include degraded channel structure and floodplain, riparian communities, water quality (including nutrients, temperature, and chemical containments), altered hydrology, sediment routing, impaired fish passage, and limited spawning habitat (Carmichael 2010). Key threats identified include hydropower operations, land use practices, and hatchery practices (Carmichael 2010).

NMFS (2000) reported that one of the most significant sources of risk to steelhead in the MCR ESU is the dramatic increase in the percentage of hatchery fish escapement in the Deschutes River Basin. ODFW has estimated from capture of adult steelhead at Sherars Falls (RM 42) that in recent years, the percentage of hatchery steelhead strays in the Deschutes River has exceeded 70%, and based on differential marking (BOR 2003), many of these are believed to be long-distance strays from outside the ESU. A corresponding decline in the abundance of native wild steelhead in the Deschutes River was coincident with this increase in the percentage of strays. NMFS (2000) stated that in combination with the increasing trend in hatchery fish in the Deschutes River, estimates of increased proportions of hatchery fish in the John Day and Umatilla River Basins pose a risk to native wild steelhead due to negative effects of genetic and ecological interactions with hatchery fish.

3.2.11 Previous and ongoing conservation efforts

Since adoption of the Recovery Plan in 2009, considerable effort has been expended in addressing riparian and passage issues in the Cascades Eastern Slope Tributaries MPG and these efforts are summarized in NMFS (2016):

- The Pelton-Round Butte Selective Water Withdrawal and Fish Collection Facility has been in operation since 2010 (ODFW 2015a). Efforts to improve flow patterns through the reservoir and modify the operating procedures to restore downstream water quality and reintroduce steelhead smolts and fry above the Project are ongoing (PGE 2015).

- In addition to the improvements to passage at the Pelton-Round Butte hydroelectric system, major protection measures and restoration projects in the Deschutes River Westside watersheds included acquisition of 450 acres along 2 miles of Whychus Creek, improvement of 6 fish passage barriers which made an additional 31 stream miles accessible and improvement of channel complexity in 4 miles of stream was completed (ODFW 2015b).
- Major restoration actions in the Deschutes River Eastside watersheds included improvement of eight barriers that opened up about 119 miles of additional habitat and development of another 4.5 miles of stream through side channel developments (ODFW 2015c). Additionally, over 4 miles of stream length was improved by adding roughness elements, 85 riparian miles were treated or protected, and 20 irrigation systems were improved for efficiency (ODFW 2015c).
- Within the Klickitat River basin, improvement of passage at Castile Falls and Lyle Falls were identified as needs in the 2009 Middle Columbia River Steelhead Recovery Plan (NMFS 2009). These projects have been completed. Completion reports for the Lyle Falls and Castile Falls passage projects are not yet finalized.
- The mainstem Klickitat River was disconnected from its floodplain for long reaches due to the presence of HWY 142, Klickitat River Road, and the former railroad embankment. The Haul Road Project restored 29.3 acres of floodplain function and planted 5.15 miles of riparian vegetation within the affected reach (Lindley and Conley 2013, 2015; Conley and Lindley 2012).
- The Columbia River Land Trust, in cooperation with Washington Department of Natural Resources (DNR), has purchased the development rights for about 9,000 acres of the mainstem Klickitat River, protecting these acres from further development into the future. The project protects 5.2 miles of the mainstem and 24 miles of tributary habitat (Florip 2014).
- Within the Fifteenmile Creek watershed, channel complexity was addressed in roughly 2.5 miles of stream, 43 miles of riparian area were planted, nine irrigation systems were improved for efficiency, and 91% of the riparian area in the watershed has been protected under the Conservation Reserve Enhancement Program (CREP) (ODFW 2015d, OWEB 2015).
- Also, in the Fifteenmile Creek watershed, the Fifteenmile Action to Stabilize Temperatures (FAST) was formally adopted and implemented in 2013 (FAST 2013). The FAST plan, a cooperative agreement among agencies and landowners, is intended to reduce the occurrence of high stream temperature events through planning and appropriate reduction of water use. Components of the plan include pre-season irrigation planning in light of forecasted water supply conditions and in-season modification of timing and quantity of water withdrawal intended to reduce the impacts of irrigation on water temperature during peak temperature events. Continued plan implementation and monitoring support is necessary to track implementation effectiveness and validate the predictive model.

Two evaluations of canopy closure conducted throughout the Rock Creek watershed (ENVIRON 2013, Harvey 2014) reported that roughly 98% of fish bearing streams naturally have trees growing in the riparian area. Roughly 5 miles of riparian area were identified that needed riparian plantings. To date, approximately 90% of the identified areas have been planted. PacifiCorp completed removal of Condit Dam from the White Salmon River watershed in September 2012 providing access to 16.9 miles of habitat for salmon and steelhead that had been blocked for over 100 years (PacifiCorp 2012a,b).

In 2013, NMFS designated a Nonessential Experimental Population (NEP) under the ESA for MCR steelhead above the Pelton Round Butte Hydroelectric Project (50 CFR Part 223). The NEP designation will authorize the continued release of MCR steelhead to the upper Deschutes River basin and will designate these fish as a NEP (50 CFR Part 223). The designation will expire 12 years from the effective date of the final rule on January 15, 2013. The reintroduction was a requirement of the hydropower license for the Pelton Round Butte Hydroelectric Project (FERC 2005). The NEP designation will end January 2025, and if MCR steelhead remain listed, steelhead in the Upper Deschutes basin will be afforded equal protection under the ESA for the middle Columbia region (DBHCP 2020). The primary goal of the reintroduction program is to provide steelhead access to Crooked River between Lake Billy Chinook to Bowman Dam (DBHCP 2020).

In addition, significant habitat restoration and protection actions at the federal, state, tribal, and local levels have been implemented to improve degraded habitat conditions and fish passage issues described in the 2009 Recovery Plan.

3.2.12 Conservation needs

In 2009, NMFS completed the final recovery plan for the MCR steelhead DPS. The recovery plan contains recommendations for recovering the MCR Steelhead DPS in the Columbia River Basin.

As described above, the MCR steelhead DPS is split into MPGs. Within the Cascades Eastern Slope Tributaries MPG, there are three populations within the MPG that are within the Action Area: Deschutes River East, Deschutes River West, and Crooked River.

The Deschutes River East population is considered viable (defined in terms of abundance, productivity or growth rate, spatial structure, and diversity) and the Deschutes River West population is considered to be high risk based on the population assessment. If steelhead reintroduction within the Crooked River succeeds, then viability of the Cascades Eastern Slope Tributaries MPG would be further bolstered. Recovery was identified to include actions to reduce straying of out of DPS hatchery fish into natural spawning grounds, restore historic passage, improve hatchery management, fill in data gaps, improve species survival, and improve coordination between scientists, planners, and implementors of recovery actions (NMFS 2009).

ODFW completed the Conservation and Recovery Plan for Oregon Steelhead Populations in the Middle Columbia River Steelhead DPS (ODFW 2010) with the goal of delisting the MCR steelhead DPS. The following recovery objectives, to be achieved by 2050, include:

5. Middle Columbia steelhead are viable throughout the historical range and no longer need protection under the ESA;
6. All currently extant Middle Columbia steelhead populations are highly viable;
7. Extirpated populations (e.g., Willow Creek, Crooked River) are restored in a manner that engages landowner cooperation and does not subject landowners to ESA regulation based on the presence of previously extirpated populations until the introduced populations are self-sustaining and become part of the listed DPS;
8. All extant populations of Middle Columbia steelhead are capable of contributing ecological, social, cultural, and economic benefits on a regular and sustainable basis;

9. Working in concert with existing agreements and collaboratively with landowners and resource managers NOAA will define a suite of additional land and water resource management principles and practices that when followed will alleviate liability for possible ESA regulatory consequences to landowners and resource managers;
10. Out-of-basin limiting factors are addressed equitably and in concert with in-basin limiting factors;
11. Landowners, land managers, and agencies are provided with guidance on the protection and management of habitats to promote the recovery of Middle Columbia River steelhead;
12. Land and resource managers work with communities and other interests in a coordinated manner to achieve broad sense recovery through a shared vision of conservation where options and choices are preserved for future generations.

4 EXISTING CONDITIONS

4.1 Fish Passage

Since the 2004 BE, significant improvements to fish passage have been implemented on the Deschutes River. Major restoration along the Deschutes River watershed included improvements of 14 passage barriers that opened up habitat to about 150 stream miles within the Deschutes River watershed (NMFS 2016). Additionally, an upstream fish ladder was constructed at Opal Springs Dam and became operational in December 2019.

In 2009, PGE and the Confederated Tribes of Warm Springs completed infrastructure for fish collection at Round Butte Dam to provide downstream passage for salmon and steelhead (USFWS 2015b). The fish collection facility has been in operation since December 2009. This project also provides downstream passage for bull trout upstream and downstream of Round Butte Dam (USFWS 2015b).

Bull trout less than 10 inches are PIT tagged, right maxillary clipped, and moved downstream. Any bull trout with the right maxillary clip then are passed upstream if they return to the Pelton Trap as adults. For steelhead, all steelhead smolts are passed downstream with a maxillary clip to indicate their origin, a subset are PIT tagged. Fish originating in the Lower Deschutes are not permitted to pass upstream due to concern that these fish may bring new diseases into the upstream reaches (USFWS 2020). Steelhead Adults originating from the reintroduction program and bull trout adults and subadults trapped in the Pelton Trap during upstream migration are transported and released below the thermocline in the forebay of Round Butte Dam. The Release site is approximately 2,500 ft to the southwest of the spillway intake.

For years, bull trout passed through the turbines at Round Butte into Simtustus. They would rear in the lake, then return to the Round Butte jump pool during their spawning migration. During the fall migratory season, PGE would place a finger weir at the jump pool creating a “trap.” Bull trout would be tagged and released back into Simtustus to get an estimate of the population size in the lake. Since construction of the SWW in 2010, all water from Round Butte is screened so bull trout are no longer passed into Simtustus and the jump pool is no longer operated.

Plans have been prepared to build an improved trap downstream of Round Butte Dam if the Fish Committee deems it necessary. Per Article 28 of the Settlement Agreement, PGE and the Confederated Tribes are directed to transport all migrants directly from the SWW in Lake Billy Chinook to the Lower Deschutes River bypassing Lake Simtustus and the Reregulating Reservoir during the smolt migration season. During other times of the year, PGE and the Confederated Tribes are directed to, at the request of the Fish Committee, transport downstream-migrating salmonids into Lake Simtustus to take advantage of the lentic habitat it provides. Utilization of Lake Simtustus for additional rearing would require construction of upstream and downstream fish passage facilities. PGE and the Confederated Tribes completed designs of these facilities. Plans for a downstream guidance net were filed with FERC December 12, 2012. Final plans for upstream facilities were filed with FERC on December 20, 2012. In 2013, ODFW and CTWS (the fish managers) agreed to delay construction of the Lake Simtustus fish passage facilities until 2016. In 2016, after reviewing the most recent data, the fish managers decided to wait until 2018 to review the need for these facilities (T. Wise, February 5, 2015). After reviewing the data, the co-managers further delayed construction of these facilities for an additional 5 years at which time they would re-examine the data. To date, the co-managers have not requested these facilities be constructed as rearing habitat in Lake Billy Chinook does not appear to be a limiting factor, and passage through these additional reservoirs would provide additional sources of mortality and delay for downstream migrants.

In 2019, a fish ladder was installed at Opal Springs Diversion Dam that reestablished salmonid volitional access to the Crooked River up to Bowman Dam, approximately 109 miles of the Crooked River in addition to tributaries including Ochoco, McKay, and Lytle creeks (UFSWS 2020).

4.2 Instream Flows/Hydrology

The monthly variation in flow in the Deschutes River varies less than many western rivers because it derives much of its discharge from the High Cascades Province where surface hydrology is dominated by groundwater (Gannett et al. 2003). Over 90% of the water passing through the Project on an annual basis is from groundwater sources (Gannett et al. 2003). The Project operates overall as a modified run-of-the-river system, such that the average daily discharge from the Reregulating Dam is nearly equal to the average daily inflow to the Round Butte Development. Discharge downstream of the Project is measured at the US Geological Survey (USGS) Deschutes River near Madras Gage (Number 14092500), which is located immediately downstream of the Project and upstream of the junction with Shitike Creek. Table 9 shows the mean monthly flow from 2010–2020, and the long-term average since the new license was issued in 2005. Mean monthly flows from 2010–2020 ranged from 3,680 cfs to 7,670 cfs, with an average monthly flow of 4,604 cfs. Monthly flows measured from October–January (the period during which shutdowns are slated to occur) rarely exceed 6,000 cfs, with only 2 months (both in January) exceeding 6,000 cfs between 2005 and 2020 (Table 9). Daily flows exceeded 6,000 about 27% of the time during October through January over the period of record (December 28, 1923 to May 12, 2022) and about 19% of the October through January days from October 1, 2005 to October 1, 2021.

Round Butte Dam, which impounds the basin's largest reservoir, Lake Billy Chinook, accounts for over 40% of the total potential water storage in the Deschutes River basin (Fassnacht 1997). However, this storage amount is relatively constant, since Lake Billy Chinook is usually not drawn down more than 10 ft during the winter months. Drawdown is limited to 20 ft, and thus this would formally limit annual active storage (PGE and Confederated Tribes 2001). During the first license period, the Round Butte Dam accounted for an average of only 7% of the annual active storage in the basin. Pelton and the Reregulating Dam have no active storage. The Metolius River, the Deschutes River, and the Crooked River contribute most of the water that flows into Lake Billy Chinook. Wychus Creek and Fly Creek also contribute minor amounts of water.

The Reregulating Dam stores water to buffer flow fluctuations due to peaking power generation from Pelton Dam. This provides a constant discharge to the Lower Deschutes River on a daily basis (Grant et al. 1999). The Project does not affect peak flows during extreme peaks, though it does delay the timing of peak flows in the Lower Deschutes River. Flows from the upper Deschutes and Crooked rivers, from above the major spring sources, are highly affected by diversions for agriculture. As much as 94% of monthly streamflow in these reaches is diverted at the height of the irrigation season (Fassnacht 1997).

Because of the large groundwater contribution in the Deschutes River, peak flows have low magnitude relative to the average annual flow. For example, the highest annual peak from 1924–2021 was only about 5 times greater than the mean annual flow during that period. Annual peak flows have historically occurred in every month except August, with most of the peaks occurring from December to April.

4.3 Water Quality

Portions of the Lower Deschutes River are listed (303[d]) as water quality limited for DO based on data collected between 1999 and 2011, where Highway 26 crosses the Deschutes near Warm Springs (DEQ 2022). The Lower Deschutes River is also listed (303[d]) for pH based on data from 1994 to 2003 (DEQ 2022).

With the addition of the SWW facility, adjustments to flow and water temperatures to better capture historical conditions have occurred since operations starting in 2010 (NMFS 2016). At various points in the year, water is withdrawn from different levels of the thermocline within Lake Billy Chinook to better regulate temperature in the Lower Deschutes River. In the winter (November through mid-May), water is withdrawn from the surface. Mid-May through August, withdrawn water is a blend of surface and deeper water with the proportion of deeper water increasing as the summer progresses.

PGE monitors water quality including temperature, dissolved oxygen (DO), and pH in Project reservoirs and upstream and downstream sites in accordance with the Water Quality Management and Monitoring Plan (WQMMP). In addition, PGE sampled for nutrients (total phosphorus, phosphate, total nitrogen, nitrate, and ammonia), algae attached to the substrate, and algae present in the water column (Eilers and Vache 2021). Operation of the SWW causes an increase in the fraction of water from the nutrient-rich Crooked River in spring and early summer, leading to increases in nitrate concentrations (Eilers and Vache 2021). There could also be an increase in periphyton, but data to evaluate this increase are not available. Increased algal production in Lake Billy Chinook due to the SWW have increased pH levels in the lake. The effects of increased pH in Lake Billy Chinook on the Lower Deschutes River are not clear. The pH of the Lower Deschutes River experiences large diurnal fluctuations due to periphyton activity, and there is no evidence that pH has increased in the Lower Deschutes River due to operation of the SWW (Eilers and Vache 2021).

Temperature data are used to assess current temperature as well as temperature if the Project was not present (without Project temperature). Comparison of the without Project temperature and measured temperatures are used to guide the operation of the SWW. Hourly temperatures are monitored in Project reservoirs and 8 sites in the Lower Deschutes River (Campbell 2020). As described in Campbell (2020), continuous temperature profiles are measured at the forebays of Round Butte and Pelton dams at vertical intervals from the surface to 100 meters, and surface to 40 meters respectively. Four temperature profiles are measured monthly in Lake Billy Chinook and the Pelton Dam forebay (Figure 4, Campbell 2020). In 2019, the hypolimnion (20 meters or approximately 66 ft) reached a maximum temperature of 13.1 °C in October. Additional monthly water quality data are collected at 16 sites in and around the Project (Campbell 2020).

Recently, the PRB Project operated under interim agreements with ODEQ and Confederated Tribes Water Control Board for temperature and dissolved oxygen. The 2019 interim agreements allowed that Project discharge waters (as the 7-day average maximum temperature at the Madras Gage) would meet or fall below the calculated temperature without the Project in place once temperatures reached 13 °C, and that temperatures could be up to 0.5 °C above the calculated temperature for up to three days (Campbell 2020). Previously, the temperature threshold was 10 °C based on the WQMMP. The operation of SWW is adjusted to maintain temperatures within these limits but stream discharge temperatures have exceeded guidelines for short periods in the summer (e.g., Campbell 2020).

Based on temperature data collected from 2017 through 2021, average daily temperatures at the surface (0-meter depth to 30-meter depth) within Lake Billy Chinook ranged between 12°C and 16°C degrees in early October (October 1-15) and depths greater than 30 meters had temperatures ranging from 8.6°C to 12.4°C (PGE unpubl. data). By mid-October (around October 15), the reservoir temperatures cooled, and daily average surface temperatures were between 11.7°C and 14.8°C. Average daily surface temperatures at depths below 30 meters were 9.1°C to 12.2°C. By early November the reservoir destratified and the forebay had similar temperatures compared to the depths. By November 1, the daily average surface temperatures were between 11.0°C and 12.3°C, and depths below 30 meters were between 9°C and 11.5°C.

In 2017 through 2021, the average daily water temperatures ranged from 12.2°C to 13.5°C in early October downstream of the Reregulating Dam at the tailrace (USGS 2022). The average daily water temperatures in mid-October ranged from 11.2°C to 13.1°C. During the month of October, these temperatures occurred when a blend of surface and deeper water from Lake Billy Chinook was approximately 35% and 65%, respectively. In early November, temperatures ranged from 10.0°C to 11.4°C.

ODEQ and the Confederated Tribes Water Control Board criteria for DO of Project discharge waters is 9.0 mg/L during the spawning season 8.0 mg/L outside the spawning season. The spawning season was defined as October 15–June 15 based on ODEQ, and October 15–July 1 based on the Confederated Tribes Water Control Board (Campbell 2020). Historically (i.e., before the use of the SWW) full bottom water withdrawal was associated with low DO in the discharge waters. Since the use of the SWW, DO issues has improved, but, since there is still oxygen poor bottom water mixed in, there is a need to spill at the Reregulating Dam to help meet DO targets in the reaches downstream of the Project. For example, in 2019, spill through the tailrace occurred from August 8–October 21 (Campbell 2020) to address low DO downstream of the Project.

Campbell (2020) measured DO and pH using Hydrolab water quality multi-parameter probes at 16 sites in the basin. DO values in Pelton and Round Butte forebays are typically highest in the summer and at the surface. Low DO values are typically observed at depth in Project waters due to stratification of the reservoirs, with the DO below 9.0 mg/L at depths exceeding 4 meters in Pelton Dam and Round Butte Dam forebays. DO values in the lower river at Sandy Beach are typically greater than 10 mg/L. Some measurements of DO were less than DO criteria at Dizney in April, May, and July 2019, but were similar to DO of inflow sites to the Project (Campbell 2020). Measurements of intergravel DO in artificial spawning gravels downstream of the Reregulating Dam had values exceeding 9.0 mg/L in 2019.

The Project is required to maintain pH between 6.5 and 8.5. The surface waters of Lake Billy Chinook and Lake Simtustus can have pH values above this threshold in the summer (Eilers and Vache 2021). In the Lower Deschutes River, pH is typically higher in the summer months and ranged from 8.2 to 8.7 at Sandy Beach in 2019 (Campbell 2020). Temporal patterns in DO and pH are similar in Project reservoirs and the lower river (Eilers and Vache 2021).

4.3.1 Nutrients

Lake Billy Chinook can experience high nutrient concentration which leads to algal and cyanobacteria blooms (Eilers and Vache 2021). High nutrient concentrations originated from the Crooked River are transported downstream to the Lower Deschutes River, further promoting growth of periphyton (Eilers and Vache 2021). Much of the phosphorus entering Lake Billy Chinook is derived from natural weathering, although anthropogenic nitrate and phosphorous enter Lake Billy Chinook from the Crooked River (Eilers and Vache 2021).

4.4 Habitat Elements and Channel Condition/Dynamics

4.4.1 Sediment dynamics

The geomorphic stability of the Deschutes River is due to a hydrologically uniform flow regime and low rate of sediment supply (Fassnacht et al. 2003, O'Connor et al. 2003a). Much of the morphology of the river was set by Quaternary landslides and lahars (O'Connor et al. 2003b). Although Project reservoirs capture sediment and prevent it from being transported to the Lower Deschutes, the amount of trapped sediment is relatively small compared to the watershed area (O'Connor et al. 2003b). A multiyear geomorphic study of the Lower Deschutes River suggested that transport events are very infrequent and that gravel downstream of the dam is relatively stable (Grant et al. 1999, Fassnacht et al. 2003). Flows competent to mobilize the streambed occur less frequently than on other alluvial rivers. Analysis of gage data collected just below the Reregulating dam reveals slow, minor degradation of the channel over the entire period of record, indicating the dams have not noticeably accelerated long-term incision rates (Fassnacht et al. 2003). There is some indication of armoring of the streambed in the 5-km (3-mi) reach from the Reregulating Dam downstream to Shitike Creek, the first tributary downstream (McClure 1998). However, this was not found to be statistically significant in a detailed analysis of longitudinal trends in surface and subsurface grain sizes (McClure 1998).

Bed material in the Lower Deschutes River had median diameter (D50) between 74.5 mm (2.93 inches) to 95.0 mm (3.74 inches) with no trends within distance downstream (Fassnacht 1997). Particle size appears to be controlled more by local hydraulics and local sediment sources than by distance downstream (Fassnacht 1997).

4.4.2 Large woody debris

Under historical conditions, the primary source of LWD to the Lower Deschutes River may have been white alders, which commonly grow in the riparian zone of the Deschutes River (USFS and USBLM 2001). The Project currently blocks the movement of LWD from the Upper Deschutes, Crooked, and Metolius rivers to the Lower Deschutes River (Minear 1999). Pursuant to Article 434 the Licensees manage a Lower River Wood Management program to place wood along the shoreline within the Action Area, including in the lower Deschutes River downstream of Lake Billy Chinook (FERC 2005). The Crooked and Deschutes rivers upstream of the Project flow through largely unforested terrain, though large mature Ponderosa pines are present in the rivers' riparian areas. Floods of a magnitude to transport large wood from the Metolius Basin are very rare events, and only two events, December 1964 and February 1996, occurred during the previous 50-year FERC license period. There have only been three documented flow events in the past 200 years large enough to transport wood out of the Metolius River (Hosman et al. 2003). During the 1996 flood, considerable large wood was transported out of Shitike Creek, and the Warm Springs and White rivers as these streams also had floods of record. However, very little of this wood was deposited in channel. This was a bank topping event and wood transported by these large flows was deposited for the most part high on the outside of bends or on ancient flood bars out of channel (Minear 1999). For this reason, it appears that large wood has never been an important contributor to fish habitat in the Lower Deschutes River. Of 153 islands in the Lower Deschutes River studied by Curran and O'Connor (2003) that appeared at least once in maps and photos since 1911, none were documented to be formed by accumulations of large wood (Pribyl et al. 1997).

4.4.3 Channel morphology

Channel morphology along the Lower Deschutes River is generally stable, with few meander bends and point bars (Fassnacht 1997). Low frequency of bedload transport and low sediment supply coupled with minimal Project-induced effects on streamflow suggest only limited armoring, channel degradation or morphological change would be expected in the Lower Deschutes as a result of impoundment (Grant et al. 1999, Fassnacht et al. 2003). Historical cross sections and aerial photograph analyses are consistent with this interpretation.

4.4.4 Habitat restoration

Major restoration efforts in the Deschutes River watershed have been implemented since the new license was issued in 2005. Gravel augmentation occurred in 3 sites between the Reregulation Dam and Shitike Creek in 2007 (Stillwater Sciences 2015). Additional restoration projects have been undertaken upstream and downstream of the Project. Restoration includes habitat improvement on tributaries, gravel augmentation, and placement of wood structures in the Deschutes River and tributaries (PGE and CTWS 2021). Habitat enhancement including placed gravel, wood, and boulders was implemented at 2 sites downstream of the Reregulation Dam in 2019. The Licensees established the Pelton Round Butte Fund to support resource conservation efforts for Project-related impacts. The Pelton Round Butte Fund has funded approximately $20 million of additional habitat and water conservation projects throughout the Action Area.

4.4.5 Lake Billy Chinook

Lake Billy Chinook is a 4,000-acre reservoir that is comprised of the Crooked, Deschutes, and Metolius river arms (PGE 2021). The surface water elevation oscillates less than 1 ft daily and 10 ft seasonally (PGE 2021). Lake Billy Chinook supports a public fishery (PGE 2021). Water flows downstream from Lake Billy Chinook and takes approximately 30 hours to reach Pelton Dam, impounding Lake Simtustus (PGE 2021). It is operated as run-of-river where the outflow is approximately equal to the inflow daily (DBHCP 2020). The reservoir is surrounded by towering basalt rock cliffs, juniper woodlands, and shrub-steppe (Oregon State Parks 2018).

4.4.6 Lake Simtustus

Lake Simtustus is a 540-acre reservoir (PGE 2021). The surface water elevation oscillates approximately 3 ft seasonally and less than 1 ft daily (PGE 2021). Lake Simtustus supports a public fishery (PGE 2021). Water discharged from Pelton Dam flows downstream to enter the Reregulating Reservoir.

4.4.7 Reregulating Reservoir

The Reregulating Reservoir is fairly small (190 acres) and is closed to the public. The surface water elevation changes more drastically than the other two reservoirs (15 ft per day is typical) (PGE 2021). The Reregulating Reservoir is operated to lessen the high and low peak flows that are produced by the Round Butte and Pelton dams (PGE 2021). Water discharged from the Reregulating Dam flows into the Lower Deschutes River. The distance between Lake Billy Chinook and Reregulating Dam is 9.5 miles.

4.4.8 Current fishery in Lake Billy Chinook

Annual spring angler surveys have been conducted since 1990, with the exception of 1994, 1995, 2001, and 2020 (Hill 2022). Since the 2004 BO, the 25 non-anadromous form of sockeye salmon (Oncorhynchus nerka), known as kokanee, per day bonus was eliminated, leaving the kokanee daily harvest as a portion of the 5 trout per day limit and a five-fish bonus bag limit was added (Hill 2022). From March to October 2021, an estimated 24,147 hours were spent angling on Lake Billy Chinook (Hill 2022). The survey showed that an estimated 1,170 bull trout were caught, 77 legal size (>600 mm) bull trout were harvested, 118 legal size bull trout were released, and 975 sub-legal were captured and released (Hill 2022). Figure 5 shows the legal and sublegal bull trout caught between March and April from 1997–2021 (Figure 2, Hill 2022). In addition, 42 Chinook and steelhead juveniles were caught and released in 2021 (Hill 2022).

4.5 Hatchery Supplementation

The Round Butte Hatchery is owned by the Licensees and operated/managed by ODFW. Fish raised at the hatchery include spring Chinook, steelhead, and sockeye salmon (ODFW 2022). The hatchery conducts a spring Chinook and summer steelhead aquaculture program (PGE 2021).

The FERC license requires the hatchery to release 380,000 spring Chinook smolts in the Deschutes River downstream of the Regulating Dam annually. From 2016–2019, the hatchery produced spring Chinook fry to be released upstream of the Pelton-Round Butte Project, but these releases were discontinued in 2020 (PGE 2021). A goal of the hatchery is to provide 120,000 (formerly 56,000 in brood years 2016–2017) spring Chinook eyed-eggs to Fall River (formerly Wizard Falls) to eventually be released as yearling smolts into the Deschutes River/Whychus Creek, Metolius River, and Crooked River. The objective of these goals include providing fish for harvest in marine and freshwater fisheries in addition to restoring anadromous Chinook populations in the historic habitats upstream of Round Butte Dam (PGE 2021). Between 1999 and 2020, the number of hatchery and natural origin spring Chinook returns at the Pelton Fish Trap ranged from 268 (in 2020) to 5,217 (in 2009) (PGE 2021).

Four goals are identified for the summer steelhead program, current for 2020 but not representative of the stocking strategies between 2016 and 2019 (PGE 2021). Updates to these goals occurred in 2020 due to results of studies based on fry survival, adult returns, and genetic concerns of native populations (PGE 2021). The goals are listed as follows:

1. Produce 162,000 summer steelhead smolts annually to mitigate for production and habitat losses caused by the Project.
2. Produce 30,000 post-smolt summer steelhead yearlings for release into Lake Simtustus as catchable trout to mitigate for production and habitat losses caused by the Project.
3. From 2016–2019, produce between 574,000 and 994,000 summer steelhead fry to be released into appropriate habitat above the Project for the reintroduction program. Fry releases were discontinued in 2020.
4. Produce 152,000 eyed eggs (56,000 eggs in BYs 2016–2018) for transfer to Wizard Falls for rearing. Wizard Falls Hatchery rears 100,000 smolts (20,000 pounds) for release into Whychus Creek (50,000) and the Crooked River (50,000). This replaces fry releases at the upriver reintroduction sites. Upstream smolt releases were increased from 50,000 to 100,000 starting with brood year 2019.

Small-scale experimental hatchery production of sockeye salmon did occur but was discontinued in 2019 (PGE 2021).

Broodstock to be used for the Round Butte Hatchery spring Chinook and steelhead reintroduction was collected at the Pelton Fish Trap (PGE and CTWS 2021). Wild, anadromous salmonids collected within the trap were returned to the Deschutes River.

4.6 Introduced Fish Species

This section is the same as the BE except for three additional species within the Action Area: largemouth bass (Micropterus salmoides), common carp (Cyprinus carpio), and bluegill (Lepomis macrochirus). The majority of introduced species are captured at the SWW during the warmer months (i.e., April through June, PGE and CTWS 2021). Table 10 displays the totals of introduced fish that have been captured at the SWW between 2009 and 2021 (PGE unpubl. data).

4.7 Status of Federally Listed Species and Critical Habitat in the Action Area

4.7.1 Bull trout

Distribution, life history, and population trends of bull trout within the Action Area are discussed in Section 3.1 Bull Trout. Existing habitat conditions and the status of critical habitat in the Action Area are discussed below.

4.7.1.1 Existing conditions in the Action Area

Bull trout habitats within the Deschutes River basin includes mainstem rivers, lakes, spring systems, glacially fed streams, and headwater streams (DBHCP 2020). The Deschutes River basin does not support anadromous populations of bull trout, but adfluvial populations throughout their occupied habitat within the basin and possibly fluvial populations in the Lower Deschutes River (USFWS 2015a, 2020).

It is likely that bull trout that reside in Lake Billy Chinook migrate upstream to the Whychus Creek, Middle Deschutes River, or the Crooked River in late fall or winter when temperatures are suitable (DBHCP 2020). Bull trout do not spawn in Lake Billy Chinook (DBHCP 2020).

Bull trout are expected to forage, migrate, or overwinter in the habitat that opened in the Crooked River basin (USFWS 2020).

Whychus Creek is utilized by bull trout as seasonal foraging habitat and a migratory corridor (USFWS 2020). The distribution has been reduced in this subbasin due to degraded habitat from irrigation activities (USFWS 2020). However, in recent years, the flows and habitat conditions have improved and bull trout are present up to about RM 8.5 (USFWS 2020).

Movement between the Warm Springs Reservation and the Metolius River populations are facilitated by a trap-and-haul program around the Pelton Round Butte Dam (PGE 2021). The Metolius populations are hydraulically connected and spawn and rear in the Metolius River as well as forage, migrate, and overwinter in the Metolius River, Lake Billy Chinook, the Middle Deschutes River, Whychus Creek, and the Crooked River subbasin (USFWS 2020).

4.7.1.2 Status of critical habitat in the Action Area

As discussed in Section 3.2.4 Listing History, the USFWS issued a final rule designating critical habitat for the bull trout for the Klamath River, Columbia River, Jarbidge River, Coastal Puget Sound, and Saint Mary-Belly River populations on September 26, 2005 (70 FR 56212) with revised designations on January 14, 2010 (75 FR 2270) and again on October 18, 2010 (75 FR 63898). Critical habitat for bull trout was revised by USFWS in 2010 and 144.7 miles (232.8 kilometers) of stream/shoreline within the Lower Deschutes River Unit was designated (USFWS 2010).

Primary biological features (PBFs) within designated critical habitat areas, characterized as essential habitat elements for the biological needs of foraging, reproducing, rearing of young, dispersal, genetic exchange, or sheltering were identified as the following (USFWS 2020 [BO]):

5. Springs, seeps, groundwater sources, and subsurface water connectivity (hyporheic flows) to contribute to water quality and quantity and provide thermal refugia.

6. Migration habitats with minimal physical, biological, or water quality impediments between spawning, rearing, overwintering, and freshwater and marine foraging habitats, including but not limited to permanent, partial, intermittent, or seasonal barriers.
7. An abundant food base, including terrestrial organisms of riparian origin, aquatic macroinvertebrates, and forage fish.
8. Complex river, stream, lake, reservoir, and marine shoreline aquatic environments, and processes that establish and maintain these aquatic environments, with features such as large wood, side channels, pools, undercut banks and unembedded substrates, to provide a variety of depths, gradients, velocities, and structure.
9. Water temperatures ranging from 2°C to 15°C (36°F to 59°F), with adequate thermal refugia available for temperatures that exceed the upper end of this range. Specific temperatures within this range will depend on bull trout life-history stage and form; geography; elevation; diurnal and seasonal variation; shading, such as that provided by riparian habitat; streamflow; and local groundwater influence.
10. In spawning and rearing areas, substrate of sufficient amount, size, and composition to ensure success of egg and embryo overwinter survival, fry emergence, and young-of-the-year and juvenile survival. A minimal amount of fine sediment, generally ranging in size from silt to coarse sand, embedded in larger substrates, is characteristic of these conditions. The size and amounts of fine sediment suitable to bull trout will likely vary from system to system.
11. A natural hydrograph, including peak, high, low, and base flows within historic and seasonal ranges or, if flows are controlled, minimal flow departure from a natural hydrograph.
12. Sufficient water quality and quantity such that normal reproduction, growth, and survival are not inhibited.
13. Sufficiently low levels of occurrence of non-native predatory (e.g., lake trout, walleye, northern pike, smallmouth bass); interbreeding (e.g., brook trout); or competing (e.g., brown trout) species that, if present, are adequately temporally and spatially isolated from bull trout.

Critical habitat within the Action Area include the following reaches (DBHCP 2020, USFWS 2020 [BO]):

- Whychus Creek from the confluence with the Deschutes River to approximately RM 6
- The Crooked River from the confluence with Lake Billy Chinook to Highway 97
- The mainstem Deschutes River from Big Falls to Lake Billy Chinook
- Lake Billy Chinook
- Trout Creek from the confluence with the Deschutes River to approximately RM 2
- The mainstem Deschutes River from the confluence with the Columbia River to approximately RM 68, with some exclusions. Critical habitat does not include the reach of the mainstem Deschutes between Round Butte and Reregulating dams due to lack of suitable habitat and volitional passage.

4.7.2 Steelhead

Distribution, life history, and population trends of steelhead within the Action Area are discussed in Section 3.2 Middle Columbia River Steelhead. Existing habitat conditions and the status of critical habitat in the Action Area are discussed below.

4.7.2.1 Existing conditions in the Action Area

There are potential impacts to the Deschutes River populations due to out of subbasin hatchery fish straying onto the natural spawning grounds in the Action Area (NMFS 2009, 2016). The Oregon Mid-C Expert Panel considers this a primary threat to the genetic traits and productivity of the natural Deschutes populations. The stray populations have reduced in recent years but remain high in the spawning reaches of the natural Deschutes populations (NMFS 2016). The primary limiting factor for steelhead production in the Deschutes River basin is juvenile rearing habitat (Ackerman et al. 2007; Courter et al. 2014 as cited in DBHCP 2020).

The Pelton-Round Butte Hydroelectric Project, located on the mainstem Deschutes River at RM 100, is an upstream barrier to anadromy for steelhead attempting to migrate to the spawning and rearing areas upstream of this area (NMFS 2009).

4.7.2.2 Status of critical habitat

Middle Columbia River Steelhead are federally threatened within the Action Area. Critical habitat was withdrawn for this species at the time of the 2004 BE. However, critical habitat was designated for this species in 2005 within the Action Area on the Deschutes River from the confluence with the Columbia River upstream to Reregulating Dam, which is a barrier to volitional anadromy (NMFS 2009).

The essential features of critical habitat for steelhead includes water quality, substrate, water quantity, water temperature, food, riparian vegetation, water, velocity, space, and passage (NMFS 2009).

4.8 Magnuson Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act

The Magnuson Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act, as amended by the Sustainable Fisheries Act (Public Law 104 to 297), requires that all federal agencies consult with NMFS on activities or proposed activities authorized, funded, or undertaken by that agency that may adversely affect essential fish habitat (EFH). EFH is identified for anadromous Pacific salmon stocks managed by the PFMC under the Pacific Coast Salmon Fishery Management Plan. These managed salmon include most of the Chinook salmon stocks from Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and California. The geographic extent of freshwater EFH is specifically identified in the Pacific Coast Salmon Fishery Management Plan as all waterbodies currently or historically occupied by PFMC-managed salmon in Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and California.

The 2018–2027 Management Agreement under United States vs. Oregon establishes goals to rebuild fisheries runs using techniques including artificial production. The current objectives for the Round Butte Hatchery were recommended by a Production Advisory Committee to achieve this goal.

5 EFFECTS OF THE PROPOSED ACTION ON LISTED SPECIES AND CRITICAL HABITAT

5.1 Effects of the Supplemental Proposed Action on Bull Trout

The supplemental Proposed Action has the potential to cause direct and indirect effects on bull trout. Entrainment into the spillway and Lake Simtustus when the spillway gate is opened is a potential direct effect. Changes in water quality downstream of the Reregulating Dam while the SWW is deactivated and water is released from the surface only through the spillway in October is a potential indirect effect. These potential direct and indirect effects are discussed in detail below.

5.1.1 Entrainment

When the SWW is deactivated and the spillway opened, there is the potential to entrain bull trout into and through the spillway tunnel and into Lake Simtustus. Since Lake Simtustus is disconnected from bull trout spawning habitat, bull trout entrained into Lake Simtustus are considered mortalities for the purposes of this effects analysis because some fish may not survive passage through the spillway and even if they do survive the spillway, they would be essentially “lost” to the greater bull trout population.

The SWW fish trapping data from December 2009 to December 2021 was analyzed to predict how many bull trout might be subject to entrainment in the spillway and Lake Simtustus either daily for the exclusion net testing, turbine dewatering testing, and for short-duration spillway events for maintenance or monthly for the long-duration spillway events for maintenance.

Based on data collected from 2009 to 2021, it is predicted that on average 0.7 bull trout per day would be actively moving downstream at Round Butte Dam between October 1 and January 31. For the purposes of this effects analysis, the quantity of bull trout assumed to be actively moving downstream each day between October and January was rounded up to 1 fish per day.

During a 3-dimensional acoustic telemetry study conducted within the Round Butte forebay, the movements of bull trout were monitored as they swam near the SWW between 0 and 120 ft in depth (PGE and Blue Leaf Environmental, Inc. 2013). Bull trout occurred between 0 to 100 ft depth approximately 99% of the time and between 100- and 120-ft depth approximately 1% of the time (PGE and Blue Leaf Environmental, Inc. 2013). This study was conducted in the spring; however, it is assumed the depth distribution of bull trout would be similar during the Proposed Action between October 1 and January 31 because surface water temperatures are similar or colder October 1 through January 31 (Figure 4, Campbell 2020).

The acoustic survey coverage in PGE and Blue Leaf Environmental, Inc. (2013) excluded depths below 120-ft depth. While the number of fish occupying depths below 120 ft is expected to be low, there is more than a zero percent probability that bull trout are present below 120 ft. Given this uncertainty of bull trout occupying depths greater than 120 ft, the percentage of bull trout estimated to be present below 100-ft depth near the SWW and spillway gate was assumed to be 2% of fish actively moving downstream which is rounded up from the 1% of fish observed between 100–120 ft in PGE and Blue Leaf Environmental, Inc. (2013). This is likely an overestimate of bull trout occupying depths below 100 ft.

5.1.1.1 Exclusion net testing

For the analysis of effects of exclusion net testing on bull trout, it was assumed that the testing would occur for up to 2 days in November 2022. Based on the 1 bull trout per day assumption, up to 2 bull trout are predicted to potentially move downstream at Round Butte Dam during the 2 days of exclusion net testing.

It is assumed that an effective exclusion net will be identified and designed prior to the exclusion net testing (see Section 2.4.1 One-Time Exclusion Net Testing for exclusion net design criteria).

The net will be deployed around the intake of the spillway and will extend to 100-ft depth prior to opening the spillway gate. If the net is effective (i.e., it stays in place and excludes fish) and 2% of the bull trout occupy depths below 100-ft, 0.04 bull trout (or up to one bull trout) are predicted to be actively moving downstream at Round Butte Dam below 100 ft (i.e., the limits of the exclusion net depth) during the 2 days of testing and could be subject to entrainment in the spillway and Lake Simtustus. If the net fails, then it is assumed that it would take no more than a day for PGE to close the spillway gates. Therefore, it is predicted that up to 1 bull trout has the potential to be harmed or killed through entrainment during exclusion net testing.

5.1.1.2 Turbine dewatering testing

For the effects of turbine dewatering testing on bull trout, it was assumed that the testing would occur for up to 14 days in November/December 2022. Based on the 1 bull trout per day assumption, up to 14 bull trout are predicted to potentially move downstream at Round Butte Dam during turbine dewatering testing. The difference in timing with the net testing is to allow time for adjustments to the exclusion net based on “lessons learned” during exclusion net testing. It is assumed that an effective exclusion net will be tested and operational prior to the turbine dewatering testing. Assuming an effective exclusion net and based on the assumption of 2% of downstream moving bull trout occurring below 100-ft depth, 0.3 bull trout (or up to one bull trout) are predicted to potentially move downstream at Round Butte Dam below 100 ft during the turbine dewatering testing. Therefore, it is predicted that up to 1 bull trout has the potential to be harmed or killed through entrainment during turbine dewatering testing.

5.1.1.3 Long-duration, controlled spill events for maintenance

There are two types of long-duration, controlled spill events. The first type would occur for up to four months to facilitate TSV replacement. The replacement is currently scheduled to occur October 1, 2023 through January 31, 2024; however, it is possible that the work could occur in a subsequent year. If all three TSV replacements do not occur in that four-month period, it is assumed that a second four-month event would be needed, currently anticipated for October 1, 2024 through January 31, 2025; however, it is possible that the work could occur in a subsequent year.

It is very likely that these events will not need the full four months in both years, however for the purpose of the effects analysis these two, four-month duration events were assumed to ensure adequate time for all three TSV replacements and to account for any extra time that may be needed if the maintenance team observes something unexpected that needs servicing while the turbines are dewatered. The second type includes four additional events with a one-month duration between October 1 and January 31 in subsequent years that may be needed for further maintenance (e.g., the switchgear replacement or major SWW maintenance) during the remainder of the FERC license (from 2022 through 2055). Therefore, the cumulative total months for all long-duration spillway events for maintenance would be 12 months total between October 1 through January 31 and sometime between 2022 to 2055.

Assuming 1 bull trout would be actively moving downstream in the forebay each day between October 1 and January 31, 366 bull trout are predicted to potentially move downstream in the forebay for the duration of the Proposed Action and could be subject to entrainment into the spillway and Lake Simtustus. However, assuming the exclusion net performs as designed, only 2% (or up to 8 bull trout) are predicted to bypass the exclusion net and be subject to harm or mortality through entrainment for the duration of the Proposed Action (up to 8 bull trout total over 33 years).

5.1.1.4 Short-duration, controlled spill events for maintenance

Short-duration, controlled spill events for maintenance were assumed to have a 48-hour duration and no exclusion net. On average, 0.7 bull trout (or no more than 1) are predicted to potentially move downstream in the forebay on any given day between October 1 and January 31.

PGE anticipates the need for these short-duration, controlled spill events for maintenance to occur cumulatively 15 times (up to 30 cumulative days) for the remainder of the FERC license (from 2022 through 2055). Therefore, a maximum of 30 bull trout could be entrained over the course of the remaining FERC license, which ends in 2055 (30 bull trout total over 33 years). PGE has proposed conservation measure CM-4. Temporary holding of fish in the SWW to minimize the number of bull trout potentially harmed through entrainment. Instead, these fish would be subject to capture and up to 4 days in captivity in tanks with constant flow of cool freshwater. PGE has successfully held bull trout in the SWW without any observation of injury or mortality. The 2004 USFWS BO states that bull trout affected by the downstream passage collection, sorting, transport, and release activities are considered to be harassed and that 8% or less of captured bull trout will receive injuries and 4% or less would be killed. Therefore, holding bull trout at the SWW would be within the scope of the incidental take statement in the 2004 USFWS BO (USFWS 2004).

5.1.2 Upstream trap and haul

Other than the temporary change in release site, all take during upstream passage and release of bull trout is predicted to be within the scope of the incidental take statement of the 2004 USFWS BO. The 2004 USFWS BO states that all trapped fish are considered to be harassed and that 5% or less of the captured bull trout would receive injuries during capture, handling, transportation, and release, and that 1% or less of the bull trout would be killed during upstream passage activities. To date, PGE has documented no injuries or mortalities for bull trout during ongoing upstream trap and haul activities. Although the release site would change temporarily, the action of capturing, handling, transporting, and releasing bull trout would be the same as under existing conditions. Therefore, we are predicting the proposed action would not increase take and the trap and haul activities would be within the scope of the incidental take statements of the 2004 USFWS BO.

5.1.3 Water quality

During the months of November, December, and January, PGE's 401 certification requires full surface water withdrawal; therefore, planned spill events would continue to draw from the surface and no change in water quality relative to existing conditions is expected. During the month of October, PGE is required to draw water deeper in the reservoir so any spillway events that occur in October would result in drawing water from the surface instead of blending surface and deeper water. The potential indirect effects of spillway events on bull trout that occur in October are assessed below.

5.1.3.1 Temperature

It is expected that there would be little effect on water temperature within Lake Billy Chinook during the spilling events compared to existing conditions. In early October, the forebay could cool slightly from existing conditions when warmer surface water withdrawals are increased. However, by November, it is anticipated changes in temperature compared to existing conditions would be negligible because the water temperatures will continue to cool due to both cooling weather conditions and also cooling inflow temperatures.

It is anticipated that daily average temperature of water discharged at the Reregulating Dam may be slightly increased in October compared to baseline conditions during the spillway events. Surface water discharging from Lake Billy Chinook would increase from approximately 35% (baseline conditions) of the flow to 100% (spillway event conditions) of the flow during the spillway events. As discussed in Section 4.3 Water Quality, in October, the temperature of the surface water on average is higher than water deeper than 100 feet. As a result, it is anticipated an increase of 35% (baseline conditions) to 100% (spillway event conditions) of water pulled from the surface would increase daily average temperatures of water discharged from Lake Billy Chinook. Considering prior temperature data in October, the distance between Lake Billy Chinook and the Reregulating Dam (9.5 miles), and the cooling air and water temperature during the month of October, daily average temperatures of water discharging from the Reregulating Dam into the Deschutes River mainstem would increase compared to baseline conditions, but the increase is predicted to be much less than 1°C. Therefore, it is assumed that the temperature downstream of the Project would increase no more than 1°C from the baseline daily average temperature in October during the controlled spilling events in the Proposed Action.

As discussed in Section 3.1, bull trout are not known to spawn or rear in the mainstem Deschutes River downstream of the Reregulating Dam (DBHCP 2020) and juvenile outmigration generally occurs between March and June (PGE 2022, PGE unpubl. data). As a result, it is assumed the adult migrant life history stage would be present in the mainstem Deschutes River downstream of the Reregulating Dam in October. Based on discharge temperatures from 2017 through 2021, the daily average for the water discharging downstream of Reregulating Dam is predicted to range between approximately 11 and 14.5°C during spilling events in October (i.e., increased 1°C higher than the existing conditions). Temperatures above 15–16°C are thought to be limiting to growth and survival and temperatures above 20°C are lethal for bull trout (Buchanan and Gregory 1997, Selong et al. 2001, Dunham et al. 2003). The predicted temperature ranges are below the threshold for temperatures limiting growth and survival (above 15–16°C) and well below the temperatures that are lethal for bull trout. In addition, temperatures will remain below the ODEQ's applicable water quality standard for core cold water habitat (i.e., the maximum weekly average temperature [MWAT] of 16°C) which is considered protective of bull trout migration, foraging, and sub-adult rearing; the designated use for bull trout in the lower Deschutes River below the Reregulating Dam. Therefore, the assumed temperature increases from the Proposed Action are predicted to be biologically insignificant to bull trout and would not rise to the level of take as defined by the ESA.

5.1.3.2 Dissolved Oxygen and total dissolved gas

Spilling events are not likely to affect oxygen levels in Lake Billy Chinook. Noticeable effects of spilling events on oxygen levels or TDGs downstream of the Reregulating Dam are not anticipated given the distance from Lake Billy Chinook to the Reregulating Dam tailrace (9.5 miles). Any changes in dissolved oxygen or TDG from spilling are predicted to equilibrate with surrounding ambient water conditions by the distance/time to the discharge location. In addition, per CM-5, PGE will monitor TDGs in Lake Simtustus downstream of the Round Butte Dam spillway outlet per a monitoring plan which will be submitted to ODEQ. Therefore, the dissolved oxygen and TDG impacts to bull trout due to spilling events are predicted to be discountable and would not rise to the level of take as defined by the ESA.

5.1.4 Critical habitat

There would be no impacts to PBFs 1–4, 6–7, or 9 identified within the Action Area compared to baseline conditions. Based on the information provided in Section 5.1.2 Water Quality, there could be a slight change to water temperature in bull trout critical habitat if spilling events occur in October (i.e., PCEs 5 and 8).

If a spilling event occurs in October, there may be a slight cooling of water temperature in Lake Billy Chinook, which would improve water quality. Alternatively, spilling events that may occur in October could increase water temperatures slightly (up to 1°C of baseline temperatures) downstream of the Reregulating Dam, as discussed in Section 5.1.3. The daily average temperature increase that may occur is predicted to be biologically insignificant to bull trout (i.e., below the temperature threshold of 15°C that is thought to be limiting to the growth and survival of the species) and would be temporary. In addition, temperature changes are predicted to be much lower than 1°C compared to baseline, even though a temperature change of up to 1°C was assumed in this analysis. Therefore, the temperature changes are predicted to be insignificant and there would be no destruction or adverse modification of bull trout critical habitat.

5.1.5 Synthesis

The Proposed Action is likely to adversely affect bull trout through entrainment and capture/handling during upstream trap and haul. Water quality effects are expected to be insignificant. The exclusion net testing has the potential to harm or kill up to 1 bull trout in 2022. The turbine dewatering testing has the potential to harm or kill up to 1 bull trout in 2022. The long duration, controlled spill events for maintenance have the potential to harm or kill up to 8 bull trout over 33 years (2022 to 2055). The short duration, controlled spill events have the potential to harm or kill up to 30 bull trout over 33 years (2022 to 2055). Upstream trap and haul of bull trout would remain within the scope of the incidental take statement in the 2004 USFWS BO with 5% or less injuries to captured bull trout during capture, handling, transportation, and release, and mortality of 1% or less during the same upstream trap and haul activities. Bull trout critical habitat would not be destroyed or adversely modified. Table 11 summarizes the effects to bull trout due to the supplement to the Proposed Action.

Bull trout populations in the Deschutes River are robust and stable (USFWS 2015b) and bull trout captures at the Pelton Trap have been increasing on average between 2014 and 2021 (Table 3, PGE 2021). For example, the Metolius River population complex is so stable that it is used as donor stock for reintroduction efforts in places where bull trout have been extirpated, such as the Clackamas River Basin (Shively et al. 2007). Fish passage improvements such as the construction of the SWW at Round Butt Dam, habitat restoration projects, and changes in angling regulations have likely contributed to the stability of this population. On average, over 810 bull trout are observed each year between the Pelton Trap and the SWW (PGE unpubl. data). Of those observed and trapped bull trout, on average, approximately 780 are moved downstream and 30 bull trout moved upstream annually, and between 300 and over 6,000 bull trout are caught by anglers annually in Lake Billy Chinook depending on the year (PGE 2022). In 2022, 77 legal bull trout were captured and harvested by anglers (PGE 2022). Given the stability of this population, historical restoration efforts, and future planned restoration efforts, the Proposed Action is not likely to jeopardize the continued existence of bull trout populations in the Deschutes River Basin or the bull trout population as a whole, nor is it expected to destroy or adversely modify critical habitat, because controlled spill events from the Proposed Action would not change water quality downstream November through January and changes to water quality in October would be insignificant.

Table 11. Bull trout effects summary.

Activity	Type of Potential Effects/Take
Controlled Spill Events for Testing or Maintenance	40 bull trout potentially harmed or killed over 33 years Up to 4% mortality during downstream passage collection, sorting, transport, and release activities Up to 8% injury during downstream passage collection, sorting, transport, and release activities
Upstream Passage	Up to 1% mortality Up to 5% injury
Change from Depth to Surface Water Withdrawal in October	Potential increase in average daily water temperature of up to 1°C downstream of the Reregulating Dam in October; effects expected to be insignificant No effect to water quality November-January

5.2 Effects of the Supplemental Proposed Action on Steelhead

The supplemental Proposed Action has the potential to cause direct and indirect effects on steelhead. Entrainment into the spillway and Lake Simtustus when the spillway gate is opened is a potential direct effect. Changes in water quality downstream of the Reregulating Dam while the SWW is deactivated and water is released from the surface only through the spillway in October is a potential indirect effect. These potential direct and indirect effects are discussed in detail below.

5.2.1 Entrainment

When the SWW is deactivated and the spillway opened, there is the potential to entrain steelhead into and through the spillway tunnel and into Lake Simtustus. Due to Lake Simtustus disconnection to steelhead habitat and population, steelhead entrained into Lake Simtustus are considered mortalities as some fish may not survive passage through the spillway, and even if they do survive the spillway, they would be essentially “lost” to the greater population, because they are unlikely to successfully spawn in Lake Simtustus or pass upstream or downstream around the dams to reproduce with other steelhead in the population.

Middle Columbia steelhead are not expected to be migrating downstream in the Deschutes watershed between October and January (see Section 3.2 Middle Columbia River Steelhead for more information). However, the probability of a steelhead moving downstream at this time is more than 0; therefore, to assess the effects of the supplemental Proposed Action, PGE data on SWW fish trapping since December 2009 were used to predict how many steelhead might be subject to entrainment in the spillway and Lake Simtustus either daily for the exclusion net testing, turbine dewatering testing, and for short-duration spillway events for maintenance or monthly for the long-duration spillway events for maintenance. Based on data collected from 2009 to 2021 at Round Butte Dam, it is predicted that very few steelhead (i.e., a prediction of 0.04 individuals per day) would be moving downstream at Round Butte Dam between October 1 and January 31 on any given year (PGE unpubl. data). Within this period, the highest quantity of steelhead captured moving downstream at the SWW during one month was 6 steelhead in December 2015 (PGE unpubl. data). The remainder of the monthly data documented between 0 and 2 downstream moving steelhead per month at the SWW between October and January (PGE unpubl. data).

It is assumed that all of the controlled spill events, with the exception of the Short Duration, Controlled Spill Events for Maintenance, would include a net deployed across the forebay and down to 100 ft, as discussed in Section 5.1.1 Entrainment. During a 3-dimensional acoustic telemetry study conducted within the Round Butte forebay, the movements of steelhead were monitored as they swam near the SWW between 0 and 120 ft in depth. Steelhead occurred between 0- to 100-ft depth approximately 99% of the time and between 100- and 120-ft depth approximately 1% of the time (PGE and Blue Leaf Environmental, Inc. 2013). The study was conducted in the spring; however, it is assumed the depth distribution of steelhead would be similar during the Proposed Action between October and January because surface water temperatures are similar or colder during fall (Figure 4, Campbell 2020). There were no data collected for steelhead below 120-ft depth; however, it is assumed few fish are present below 120 ft because surface water daily average temperatures between October and January are similar or colder to those in spring (Campbell 2020). Also, optimal water temperatures for steelhead (between 11 and 15°C, NMFS 2009) occur at or near the surface (Campbell 2020) during these months. There may be more than zero steelhead at depths greater than 120 ft, but the number is predicted to be low. Therefore, it is assumed that the percentage of steelhead below 100 ft depth near the SWW and spillway gate at any given time in the work window would be 2%.

It is assumed that all of the controlled spill events, with the exception of the short-duration, controlled spill events for maintenance, would include a net deployed across the forebay and down to 100 ft, as discussed in Section 5.1.1 Entrainment. Given that very few steelhead migrate downstream during the period of the controlled spill events (i.e., between October and January), and the majority of the events will have the net deployed down to 100-ft depth, less than one steelhead would be expected to be entrained during all of the spillway events for the duration of the FERC license assuming steelhead populations remain at or near current levels. However, if the reintroduction program leads to population growth over the next 33 years, there may be more steelhead that enter the forebay October through January. Therefore, for the purposes of this effects analysis, we assume no more than 5 steelhead would become entrained across all spill events for the duration of the FERC license.

5.2.1.1 Upstream trap and haul

Other than the temporary change in release site, all take during upstream trap, haul, and release of steelhead is predicted to be within the scope of the incidental take statement of the NMFS BO. The NMFS BO states that some injury and mortality could occur due to crowding and handling at the Pelton Trap or during the release at an upstream location and 2% or less of steelhead adults would be killed during upstream passage activities. Upstream passage survival for the past 5-years for steelhead has averaged 99%. To date, PGE has documented no injuries and 0.3% mortalities for steelhead during ongoing upstream trap and haul activities. Although the release site would change temporarily, the action of capturing, handling, transporting, and releasing steelhead would be the same as under existing conditions. Therefore, we are predicting the proposed action would not increase take, and the trap and haul activities would be within the scope of the incidental take statement of the 2004 NMFS BO.

5.2.2 Water quality

During the months of November, December, and January, PGE's 401 certification requires full surface water withdrawal; therefore, planned spill events would continue to draw from the surface and no change in water quality relative to existing conditions is expected. During the month of October, PGE is required to draw water deeper in the reservoir so any spillway events that occur in October would result in drawing water from the surface instead of blending surface and deeper water. The potential indirect effects to steelhead from spillway events that occur in October are assessed below.

5.2.2.1 Temperature

As described in Section 5.1.3, it is expected that there would be little effect on water temperature within Lake Billy Chinook during the spilling events compared to existing conditions and anticipated daily average temperature of water discharged at the Reregulating Dam may be slightly increased in October compared to baseline conditions during the spillway events. Using the same assumptions described in Section 5.1.3, it is anticipated daily average temperatures of water discharging at Reregulating Dam into the Deschutes River mainstem would be much less than 1°C compared to baseline conditions. For this analysis we are assuming the temperature would increase no more than 1°C from the daily average in October during spilling events.

As discussed in Section 3.2, steelhead are known to spawn in the Deschutes River basin between January and May and may spawn and rear in the Deschutes River mainstem downstream of Reregulating Dam (DBHCP 2020). As a result, it is assumed adult migrants, adult pre-spawn holding, and juvenile rearing life history stages could be present in the mainstem Deschutes downstream of Reregulating Dam in October. As described in Section 3.2.5, the thermal temperature barrier for adult migration has been observed above 21°C (Richter & Kolmes 2006), optimal temperatures for rearing steelhead have been reported up to about 15°C (NMFS 2000, 2009; Myrick and Cech 2000, 2001; Richter & Kolmes 2006). In addition, it has been observed that pre-spawning adults held at water temperatures below 13.3°C do not impact egg development in rainbow trout broodstock (Leitritz and Lewis 1980).

Based on discharge temperatures from 2017 through 2021, the daily average temperature for the water discharging downstream of Reregulating Dam is predicted to range between approximately 11 and 14.5°C during spilling events in October (i.e., an increase of up to 1°C higher than the existing conditions). In early October (i.e., October 1 through 15), the daily average is predicted to range between 12.0 to 14.5°C and by late October (i.e., October 15 through 31) between 11.0 and 14.1°C. In addition, the minor potential temperature increases are predicted to be no more than 1°C higher than the baseline conditions for daily average temperature downstream of Reregulating Dam.

In October, the daily average temperature in the lower Deschutes River may slightly increase beyond the ODEQ's applicable water quality standard for spawning salmonids between October 15 and October 31 (i.e., MWAT of 13°C) which is protective of specific salmonid life cycle stages in the lower Deschutes River as well as the optimal temperature for female egg development in broodfish (13.3°C) throughout the month. Based on experimental observations, fish can tolerate moderate temperature fluctuations as long as the incipient lethal temperature is not exceeded for prolonged periods (Sullivan et al. 2000). In the natural environment, optimal temperatures are not necessary or realistic at all times to sustain viable fish populations (NAS and NAE 1973), and the use of MWAT as an exceedance allows some environmental variability around any daily threshold value.

The predicted temperature ranges fall below the threshold for temperatures limiting growth and survival to adult migrants and juvenile rearing steelhead. However, the temperature range may result in a slight exceedance to the optimal known temperature for gametes in pre-spawn adults that may be holding in the area. The daily average temperature exceedance that may occur in pre-spawn adults is relatively insignificant (up to 1.2°C higher than optimal temperatures) and is not anticipated to be sustained. In addition, temperatures are predicted to be much lower than 1°C compared to baseline, even though up to 1°C was utilized in this analysis. Although the controlled spills may occur in October, it is not a certainty, and potential impacts to pre-spawn adult steelhead due to minor, temporary temperature increases may not occur. As a result, the assumed temperature increases from the Proposed Action are predicted to be biologically insignificant to steelhead and would not rise to the level of take as defined by the ESA.

5.2.2.2 Dissolved Oxygen and total dissolved gas

Spilling events are not likely to affect oxygen levels in the Lake Billy Chinook. Noticeable effects of spilling events on oxygen levels or TDGs downstream of Reregulating Dam are not anticipated given the distance from Lake Billy Chinook to the Reregulating Dam tailrace (9.5 miles). Any changes in dissolved oxygen or TDG from spilling are predicted to equilibrate with surrounding ambient water conditions by the distance/time to the discharge location. In addition, per CM-5, PGE will monitor TDGs in Lake Simtustus downstream of the Round Butte Dam spillway outlet per a monitoring plan which will be submitted to ODEQ. Therefore, the dissolved oxygen and TDG impacts to steelhead due to spilling events are predicted to be discountable and would not rise to the level of take as defined by the ESA.

5.2.3 Critical habitat

The essential features of critical habitat for steelhead includes water quality, substrate, water quantity, water temperature, food, riparian vegetation, water, velocity, space, and passage (NMFS 2009). The Proposed action may impact water quality but does not impact substrate, water quantity, water temperature, food, riparian vegetation, velocity, space, or passage.

The spilling events that may occur in October could increase water temperatures slightly (up to 1°C of baseline temperatures) downstream of the Reregulating Dam, as discussed in Section 5.1.3. Temperatures changes are predicted to be much lower than 1°C compared to baseline, even though up to 1°C was assumed in this analysis. The daily average temperature increase that may occur would be temporary. Dissolved oxygen and TGD are not anticipated to change compared to baseline. Therefore, the temperature changes are predicted to be insignificant and there would be no destruction or adverse modification of steelhead critical habitat.

5.2.4 Synthesis

The Proposed Action is likely to adversely affect steelhead through entrainment and capture/handling during upstream trap and haul. Water quality effects are expected to be insignificant. During the four types of controlled spill events (i.e., exclusion net testing; turbine dewatering testing; short-duration, controlled spill events for maintenance; and long-duration, controlled spill events for maintenance), there is the potential to directly impact steelhead through entrainment into and through the spillway tunnel and into Lake Simtustus. These fish are considered mortalities for the purposes of this effects analysis. The controlled spill have the potential to result in up to 5 steelhead mortalities due to entrainment. Upstream trap and haul of steelhead would remain within the scope of the incidental take statement in the NMFS BO with less than 2% mortality of trapped upstream migrating steelhead. Steelhead critical habitat would not be destroyed or adversely modified. The Proposed Action is not likely to jeopardize the continued existence of steelhead populations in the Deschutes River Basin or the steelhead population as a whole, nor is it expected to destroy or adversely modify critical habitat, because controlled spill events from the Proposed Action would not change water quality downstream November through January and changes to water quality in October would be insignificant. Table 12 summarizes the effects to steelhead due to the supplement to the Proposed Action.

Table 12. Steelhead effects summary.

Activity	Type of Potential Effects/Take
Controlled Spill Events for Testing or Maintenance	5 steelhead potentially harmed or killed over 33 years
Upstream Passage	Up to 2% mortality
Change from Depth to Surface Water Withdrawal in October	Potential increase in water temperature of up to 1°C downstream of the Reregulating Dam in October; effects expected to be insignificant No adverse effect to water quality November-January

5.3 Cumulative Effects

The ESA requires USFWS and NMFS to evaluate the cumulative effects of the proposed actions on listed species and critical habitat and to consider cumulative effects in formulating Biological Opinions (50 CFR §402.14). The ESA defines cumulative effects as "those effects of future state or private actions, not involving federal activities that are reasonably certain to occur within the action area" of the proposed action subject to consultation (50 CFR §402.02). Future federal actions that are unrelated to the proposed action are not considered in this section because they require separate consultation pursuant to Section 7 of the ESA. The effects of federal actions, including hatcheries, fisheries, and land management activities are, therefore, not included. The area of cumulative effects analysis is defined as the Deschutes River basin.

In the USFWS BO for the Project, the service identified the following potential cumulative effects: non-federal timber harvest, recreation, urban and rural development, and water supply and water use (USFWS 2004, NMFS 2005). These remain the same potential cumulative effects for bull trout, but also apply to steelhead. USFWS found them to be unlikely to threaten the persistence of bull trout and provided support for that conclusion in the USFWS BO.

NMFS identified that population growth and movement as a Cumulative Effect that would have an overall negative effect unless carefully planned and mitigated. Although the Deschutes River basin is developing and human population is growing rapidly, Oregon has one of the most comprehensive approaches to planning in the United States. Therefore, Comprehensive Plans exist for unincorporated Deschutes County as well as the cities of Bend, La Pine, Redmond and Sisters which maintain their own urban growth boundaries. Each Comprehensive Plan was written to meet state planning requirements and to balance human population growth with natural resource management. As stated in the Deschutes County Comprehensive Plan (Deschutes County 2011), "Oregon's land use system draws a bright line between rural and urban lands and promotes new growth and infrastructure in urban areas." Additionally, the Deschutes Basin Water Collaborative was established in 2018 as a system for stakeholders to collaborate on critical management and water issues in the Deschutes Basin including water allocation (Central Oregon Intergovernmental Council 2022). Therefore, there are many policies, plans, and intergovernmental groups, beyond the several federal entities present in the Deschutes River Basin, that growth and development is carefully organized and planned, minimizing Cumulative Effects to bull trout and steelhead from population growth.

Finally, USFWS has published a more recent biological opinion for the Section 10(a)(1)(B) Permit for Deschutes Basin HCP and Reclamation Deschutes Project (USFWS 2021). In this opinion, USFWS additionally identified agricultural non-point discharges as another Cumulative Effect that could impact bull trout and could result in impaired water quality due to increased turbidity and sedimentation, increased levels of fertilizer and pesticides in foraging, migration, and overwintering (FMO) habitat. In that opinion USFWS stated that bull trout (FMO) habitat has remained functional despite these effects, some of which have been reduced in recent years by improved agricultural practices. The opinion then states that “these impacts could result in some impairment of bull trout feeding and migratory behaviors, but not at any severity of magnitude appreciably greater than the baseline conditions within the action area.” These effects, in addition to recreational activities, “have been ongoing activities that have contributed to the baseline condition for years or decades,” and USFWS did not foresee any particular increase in these activities and were not aware of planned activities that would have impacts beyond what currently exists within the action area of the HCP (the Deschutes River Basin) at the time the opinion was written in 2021. Therefore, USFWS did not anticipate “a worsening of habitat conditions, a worsening of impacts to individual bull trout, or a worsening of the effects to bull trout critical habitat as a result of these Cumulative Effects.”

6 MAGNUSON-STEVENS ACT AND ESSENTIAL FISH HABITAT

The Action Area includes areas designated as EFH for various life-history stages of coho and Chinook salmon. Affected portions of EFH include potential migratory corridors, spawning habitat, and rearing habitat for coho and Chinook salmon downstream of Reregulating Dam. Implementation of the Proposed Action will result in short-term impacts to water temperature, as described in Section 5.1.3. The impacts to EFH are indistinguishable to the effects described for bull trout and steelhead critical habitat, and therefore, Section 5 addresses impacts of the Proposed Action to coho and Chinook salmon EFH. The minor change in temperature would be insignificant and result in negligible effects to EFH.
