Dear Mr. Ryan:

We are happy to submit a 4-volume report which is our contribution to the first year's effort in the developing Louisiana Coastal Resources Program.

This report addresses three aspects of that developing program. It consists of four volumes, involving three separate work tasks. Volume 1 provides an inventory of geographic areas of particular concern which have recreational, historical, cultural, archeological and developmental significance. In Volume 2, methods of assessing environmental impact are reviewed and the existing "state of the art" in Louisiana today is described. Volume 3 consists of an analysis of completed, under construction and proposed projects which may have a significant impact on the coastal area. Volume 4 includes 7 maps which locate areas of particular concern and public projects listed in Volumes 1 and 3.

We have always felt that the Louisiana coast is a unique and vital region due to its abundance of both renewable and non-renewable resources. The coastal ecosystem supports many and varied uses which provide the economic base of South Louisiana. At the same time, use of the coast's resources should not exceed the point where it seriously reduces its phenomenal productivity. Hopefully, the Coastal Resources Program will enable maximum utilization of the coast's vast resources, while at the same time protecting and conserving those areas most vital to the natural system.

We hope we have contributed in the development of a process to reach this goal. Pinpointing areas of concern and locating development projects should help in delineating potential areas of conflict.

PREFACE

For many years biologists, fishermen, and conservationists have realized the value of the Louisiana wetlands as a natural resource. Today, the general public is developing a new awareness of the value of wetlands as both renewable and non-renewable resources. By any definition, the Louisiana coastal zone is a unique area of diversity and constant change. Its prolific biological production provides the basis for one of the world's most productive commercial and sport fisheries. For the past several years, Louisiana has led the nation in volume of seafood production.

Coastal Louisiana has always held a particular fascination for man. The area abounds in wildlife, game and edible plants. Due to its fertile soils and sub-tropical climate, man has flourished and thrived on the harvest of this rich landscape. The wetland's value as storm buffers, natural waste treatment systems, and scenic, cultural and recreational assets are being recognized today.

Because the marshlands are susceptible to continuous and rapid change, an ever-increasing need exists to understand the relationships and impacts of the system's many uses. It is apparent that as more demands are made on the wetlands, the level of concern for these areas must increase. Although coastal resources have always been in high demand, several trends seem to increase conflicts regarding the use of coastal areas.

One trend is rising population density; the more people there are, the greater are demands for housing, jobs, roads, public facilities, and power plants. From 1960-1970, Louisiana's population increased 11.8%. However, this rise was the result of a 15% population increase of the coastal parishes. Conversely, the non-coastal region decreased 5.5% (Paterson, et al., 1974). Based on Burford and Murzyn's population projection, from 1970-1980, the coastal region's population will expand 22.4%, while the non-coastal region's population will decline 24% (Burford & Murzyn, 1972). It is evident from these past and projected population movements that pressure on coastal areas will not abate in the foreseeable future. If anything, the pressure will increase.

A second trend is increasing leisure time which society has due to increased affluence. Increased leisure time produces more recreational demands which translate into more marinas, boat ramps, camping facilities, access roads, and second homes. Increased affluence also produces demands for more mineral resources, but extraction and transport of non-renewable resources have created conflicts with renewable resources.

A third trend lies in changing technology which has been very useful in reducing the cost of goods, but has often led to significant overlapping costs. An example of this is the increased use of fertilizers and pesticides to raise agricultural productivity. However, the water that runs off the land adds to the deteriorated water quality for other uses. Therefore, reducing the cost of agricultural goods has indirectly increased the cost of water treatment (Rettig, 1974). Resources in the coastal zone are very appealing to a wide variety of users. Unfortunately, the inter-relationships of various industrial, recreational, residential, and aesthetic uses are difficult to understand, much less assess or quantify. A particular use of one resource could make another activity more costly or difficult, cheaper, or have no effect. Activities can be mutually competitive, mutually complementary, mutually independent, or any combination of the three.

Until recent years, benefit-cost analyses had considered only the easily identifiable economic variables (e.g., commercial and sport licenses, value of agricultural products, market value of land) of marshlands, which often total less than $20/acre per year. At the other end of the pricing spectrum is the valuation of $4,000/acre per year by Odum, Gosselink, and Pope (Pope, Gosselink, 1974). Although the wetlands have always been rich in resources, many people have only recently become aware of the value of the coastal zone as a place to live, work, and play. The realization of the coastal zone's finite characteristics has evolved because of overcrowding and overdevelopment in some coastal areas and the frequent misuse of this unique environment (Ketchum, 1972). More than ever before, people are realizing that proper planning and management are urgently needed if the Louisiana coast is to continue to provide the economic benefits we have so long taken for granted.

INTRODUCTION

Prompted in part by the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, State governments are today regaining some of the control over management decisions which had been increasingly assumed by the Federal Government. Section 305 of the Coastal Zone Management Act (Public Law 92-583) gives the Secretary of Commerce the authority to make annual grants to coastal states to help in the development of management programs for wise utilization of coastal land and water resources.

Under Section 305, states are required to address six specific aspects in their management plan. Section 305 (b) (3) requires states to inventory and designate areas of particular concern. This inventory is the purpose of Volume 1 of this study for the Louisiana State Planning Office. An inventory of areas of particular concern is fundamental to proper planning as it is an expression of the most valuable or unique areas within the coastal zone. To effectively manage coastal resources, it is first necessary to identify those components which require special planning, management, or protection, or which are particularly suitable for development.

An inventory and analysis of existing data, publications, and opinions provided the basis for compiling an initial list of geographic areas of particular concern. These areas were designated based on consideration of criteria defined in the Federal Register (November 29, 1973) as follows:

- 1) Areas of unique, scarce, fragile or vulnerable natural habitat, physical feature, historical significance, cultural value and scenic importance;
- 2) Areas of high natural productivity or essential habitat for living resources, including fish, wildlife and the various trophic levels in the food web critical to their well-being;
- 3) Areas of substantial recreational value and/or opportunity;
- 4) Areas where developments and facilities are dependent upon utilization of, or access to, coastal waters;
- 5) Areas of unique geologic or topographic significance to industrial or commercial development;
- 6) Areas of urban concentration where shoreline utilization and water uses are highly competitive;
- 7) Areas of significant hazard if developed due to storms, slides, floods, erosion, settlement, etc.; and

- 8) Areas needed to protect, maintain, or replenish coastal lands or resources (including coastal flood plains, aquifer recharge areas, sand dunes, coral and other reefs, beaches, offshore sand deposits, and mangrove stands.)

This definition encompasses all areas suggested for consideration and designation as geographic areas of particular concern. Those areas considered in this report are included in the following definition:

Geographic areas of particular concern are components of the coastal environment which have ecological, recreational, historical, cultural, archeological, or developmental value. Such areas may possess natural or man-made attributes of unusual, unique, or special significance which make them especially suited for preservation, multiple use or development. Their degree of relative significance ranges from local to national importance.

Although not classified as such in this report, geographic areas of particular concern can be categorized according to capability designations. The basic concept is that "there are certain areas which, because of their attributes, require special management attention" (Clark, 1974). These areas may possess either environmental or cultural values which make them worthy of special attention. Clark classifies areas of concern into three categories, based on their use tolerances:

1. Vital Areas or Preservation Areas - Ecosystem elements of such critical importance and high value that they are to be preserved intact and protected from harmful outside forces.
2. Areas of Environmental Concern or Conservation Areas - Broad areas of environmental sensitivity (often containing one or more vital areas), the development or use of which must be carefully controlled to protect the ecosystem.
3. Areas of General Use or Utilization Areas - Areas where only the normal levels of caution are required in utilization and in development activity.

It was beyond the scope of this report to classify areas of concern according to the above scheme. This would involve a determination of land capability and use priorities which has yet to be undertaken.

The objective of Volume 1 of this report was to inventory and map areas of recreational, historical, cultural, or archeological concern that might qualify for future preservation and designation as protected vital areas. Developed and pressured areas were also mapped to provide the basis for future delineation of areas of general use. Such areas may be suitable for intensive use and development if they have no significant ecological, recreational, or cultural importance. There is pervasive opinion among resource planning agencies that estuaries and surrounding wetlands are areas of environmental concern. It therefore does not take extensive study to conclude that Louisiana's estuaries are areas of environmental concern within which human activities must be carefully controlled, though not necessarily prohibited, in order to protect the environment.

The goal of planned coastal use should be to harvest and utilize the resources of the coast while at the same time maintaining the wetlands in their natural state as much as possible. Innovative management techniques can be applied which can enhance the value and productivity of the coastal ecosystem, and not merely preserve the "status quo". Indeed, due to the dynamic and changing nature of deltaic Louisiana, it is impossible to maintain the system in a constant state. Designation of areas of particular concern is a planning classification and management technique by which this goal can be reached.

General Organization

Volume 1 of this report consists of a definition of geographic areas of particular concern, a discussion of data sources, a description of mapping procedures, lists by parish of areas of concern, criteria used in selecting the sites listed and brief summaries of the data.

DATA SOURCES

The source information used in developing the initial list of geographic areas of particular concern was derived from the reports, studies, and publications of numerous federal, state, regional agencies, and private institutions. Numbers in parentheses after each site listing refer to the source of information. Additionally, an opinion questionnaire, mailed to parish influentials and special interest groups, provided much useful information. Information was obtained from the following sources:

Federal Agencies

Bureau of Land Management
Corps of Engineers
National Park Service
Fish and Wildlife Service
Soil Conservation Service

State Agencies

Department of Highways
Tourist Development Commission
Department of Art, Historical and Cultural Preservation
Archeological Survey (State Archeologist)
Department of Commerce and Industry
Coastal Commission
Office of State Planning
Department of Public Works
Wildlife and Fisheries Commission
State Parks and Recreation Commission

Regional Planning Commissions

Regional Planning Commission, New Orleans
Capitol Regional Planning Commission, Baton Rouge
South Central Planning and Development Commission,

Tourist Centers in Lafayette and Lake Charles

Parish Influentials and Special Interests

Opinion questionnaires were sent to each of the following positions in the twenty-six coastal zone parishes:

Police Jury Presidents
Local Planning Agency Directors
League of Women Voter Representatives
Chamber of Commerce Directors
Sportsmen's Clubs in the Louisiana Wildlife Federation
Presidents of Parish Historical Societies
County Extension Agents

While some of the parishes did not have all of the seven positions represented, there was no parish with less than four questionnaire recipients. These seven interest groups were selected because they reflect a wide range of community viewpoints. Also, these groups were selected because of their distribution throughout the coastal zone.

A total of 129 questionnaires were sent to the coastal parishes. (See Appendix A which is a copy of the questionnaire.) Of these, 44 were answered for a 34% return rate. Although a 34% return rate is generally considered to be an above average rate for a mailed questionnaire, it was hoped that more persons would have replied because of the importance of the respondents' opinions in the parishes.

In general, the questionnaires were answered in detail and provided much useful information. This information was added to the initial list of areas of particular concern in each coastal parish.

MAPPING PROCEDURES

In order to begin the mapping process, the sources of information were identified. The data were gathered, then sorted and categorized. The four broad categories that the data were divided into--recreational, historical, archeological, and developmental--provided the bases for the map overlays. On each overlay, the subjects were further divided as shown on the map legends (see Volume 4).

Eight subject overlays encompassing the entire coastal area were reproduced on clear polyester film. These overlays locate sites and areas presented in the initial list of geographic areas of particular concern. Each overlay should be used with the 1:250,000 scale U.S.G.S. base map.

The base map was produced by joining six U.S.G.S. topographic maps, into one large map of the entire Louisiana Coastal Zone. The base map shows place names and physical features of coastal Louisiana while the overlays show numbered symbols corresponding to locations on the base map. This large map (7.5' x 4') was then laminated to produce a durable working surface.

The value of having each overlay on a transparent material is their versatility. The overlays can be used singly, with one overlay, or any combination of overlays. Thus, if one is interested in recreational and archeological sites, only those two overlays are used. Additional overlays at this scale, can be used, thereby increasing the number of map combinations.

One large set of maps, scale 1:250,000, has been presented to the Louisiana State Planning Office for use in public display, public participation, and policy making. These maps were reduced to half size, scale 1:500,000, and included in each copy of this study. This was accomplished by photographing each overlay over the base map onto mylar. Then, black line reprints were run from the mylars. These maps are presented separately in Volume 4.

All the sites and areas included in the resource inventory were mapped by a symbol referring to type of site with each site having a unique number. Numbered symbols on each overlay correspond to sites and areas listed in Volumes 1 and 3. The typed subject list gives the name of the site, information about the site, and its reference source.

For the sake of continuity, all areas were listed and mapped by parish in a sequential pattern from northwest to southeast across the coastal area. These parish areas were listed consecutively in the following sequence:

Calcasieu
Cameron
Jefferson Davis
Vermilion
Acadia
Lafayette
St. Martin
Iberia
St. Mary
Iberville
West Baton Rouge
East Baton Rouge
Assumption
Terrebonne
Livingston
Ascension
St. James
St. John the Baptist
St. Charles
Lafourche
Jefferson
Tangipahoa
St. Tammany
Orleans
St. Bernard
Plaquemines

As stated earlier, this inventory is an initial list and will, in all probability, need updating as new information becomes available. These listings have been arranged and numbered so that data can be easily added as the information becomes available.

INITIAL LIST OF GEOGRAPHIC AREAS OF
PARTICULAR CONCERN

RECREATIONAL AREAS OF
PARTICULAR CONCERN

Selection Criteria

Recreational areas listed and mapped are of seven categories:

1. State Parks and Monuments . Public lands administered by the State Parks and Recreation Commission. A state park is a natural area of outstanding scenic and natural qualities which provides public recreational opportunity.
2. National Parks . Public lands administered by the National Park Service.
3. Wildlife Management Areas . Public lands owned or leased by the Louisiana Wildlife and Fisheries Commission for hunting, fishing, camping, and related outdoor activities.
4. Wildlife Refuges . Lands owned by state, federal, or private interests maintained for wildlife protection, habitat preservation, and bird nesting areas .
5. Natural and Scenic Rivers . Rivers included in the Natural and Scenic Rivers System established by Act 398 of the 1970 Louisiana Legislature . These rivers have outstanding scenic and recreational qualities and are relatively unaltered from their natural state .
6. State Designated Wilderness Areas . Relatively remote sections of the coastal wetlands designated as "wilderness areas" by the State Parks and Recreation Commission .
7. Miscellaneous Recreational Facilities and Areas . Included are public and private beaches , salt domes , potential natural landmarks , campgrounds , public boat launches and marinas , and prime hunting and fishing areas .

Virtually all of Louisiana's coastal swamps and marshes are of recreational importance for hunting and fishing. Most of these wetlands are privately owned, and hunting rights are leased. Some of the larger private hunting clubs were listed and mapped, but it was not possible to do so for all private lands of recreational importance.

Areas listed and mapped were Federal, State, or local lands or facilities used for the purpose of hunting, fishing, camping, game management, wildlife protection, habitat preservation, and other related outdoor activities such as picnicking, boating, swimming, skiing, hiking and nature study. Wetland and water-related activities were emphasized. Small urban and neighborhood parks within the corporate limits of cities were mapped as one area.

Recreational area information was presented in two ways. First, all recreational areas were listed by parish, starting with Calcasieu Parish and proceeding eastward across the coastal area. Secondly, recreational sites were listed by sub-headings such as state parks, management areas, and boat ramps. These sites were listed alphabetically by parish. This cross-referencing was done because of the large number of recreational sites and their numerous sub-headings.

SYNOPSIS OF RECREATIONAL AREAS

State Parks and Monuments - There are 12 state parks and monuments in the coastal region on 5,362 acres of land.

National Parks - One national park is found in coastal Louisiana, the Chalmette National Historical Park.

Wildlife Management Areas - Ten WMA's consisting of 282,020 acres are found in the coastal region. Most are concentrated in Southeast Louisiana.

State Wildlife Refuges - Five state wildlife refuges on 260,600 acres are found in the coastal region. Most are in southwest Louisiana.

Federal Wildlife Refuges - Six federal refuges occupying 230,487 acres are found in coastal Louisiana.

Private Wildlife Refuges - One private refuge, the Paul J. Rainey Refuge of the Audubon Society, is found in Southwest Louisiana.

Natural and Scenic Rivers - There are 14 natural and scenic rivers, primarily in Southeast Louisiana.

Public and Private Beaches - Eleven beaches are listed in coastal Louisiana.

Local Parks and Recreational Areas - There are 332 local parks and recreational areas located in the coastal region.

Public Hunting, Fishing and Camping Areas - 96 areas are listed throughout the coastal region. This is not a complete listing but a reflection of opinion on the most accessible and popular of these areas.

Boat Launches and Marinas - Listed are 107 boat launches and marinas in the coastal region.

Salt Domes - The "five islands" in south central Louisiana are geological anomalies as well as recreational assets. These salt domes are called islands because of their unique topography. Elevations may reach 125 feet.

State Designated Wilderness Areas - Six areas of the coastal region classified as "wilderness areas" are listed. These areas are the most remote and relatively unaltered wetland areas of the coastal region.

National Wilderness Preservation System - Portions of the Breton
Bird Refuge are currently included in this system and sections of Lacassine and Sabine Refuges are being considered for incorporation.

HISTORICAL, CULTURAL, & TOURIST FEATURES

HISTORICAL, CULTURAL AND TOURIST FEATURES

Selection Criteria

Historical and cultural features of the coastal zone were listed and mapped in three categories:

1. Historical Sites and Tourist Attractions. These are specific features which have regional or statewide historical or tourist interest. Examples include plantation homes, forts, cemeteries, churches, museums, monuments, old administrative buildings, and battlegrounds. Excluded from this category are towns, highways, hospitals, commercial stores, and vaguely located or undocumented sites.
2. Fairs and Festivals. Fairs and festivals include cultural features, celebrations, and activities with regional or statewide interest which occur annually. Occurrence of these events is recorded by the Louisiana Tourist Commission. Examples include music and food festivals, fishing, rodeos, Mardi Gras, holiday celebrations, rodeos, and cajun bayou settlement festivals.
3. Louisiana Sites on the National Register of Historic Places. The sole requirement for inclusion in this category is that the site be listed on the National Register of Historic Places maintained by the National Park Service. To be included on the Register, the historic place must be a district, site, building, structure, or object significant in American history, architecture, archeology, or culture that possesses integrity of location design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association. Currently, there are 60 sites in the Louisiana Coastal Zone on the Register, 28 of which are national historic landmarks.

The overlay map for historical, cultural, and tourist features shows a distinct pattern of site concentrations along the larger bayous and rivers of coastal Louisiana. This is particularly true along Bayou Teche, Bayou Lafourche, and the Mississippi River. This pattern is apparently due to the traditional settlement locations along the natural levees of existing and abandoned river courses.

A total of 479 historical sites and tourist attractions were listed and mapped. One hundred fairs and festivals were listed and mapped.

Site information was presented in two ways. First, sites were listed by parish, starting with Calcasieu Parish and proceeding eastward across the coastal area. Map numbers on the lists refer to the corresponding number on the overlay map. A designation of "LU" (location uncertain) indicates that descriptive information was inadequate to accurately locate the site on the map. The second method of site presentation was by subject heading. All sites on the National Register of Historic Places and all fairs and festivals were listed by parish in alphabetical order.

ARCHEOLOGICAL SITES

Archeological evidence indicates that man has lived in coastal Louisiana for at least 12,000 years (Gagliano, 1969). Prehistoric settlements were located throughout coastal Louisiana, but were concentrated along natural levees of active streams and bayous, salt domes, cheniers, beach ridges, lakeshores, and edges of the Prairie Terrace. Due to the lack of archeological surveys in Southwestern Louisiana, most of the known sites are located in Southeast Louisiana, particularly in Terrebonne, St. Tammany, St. Bernard, Jefferson, and Lafourche Parishes. While estimates of the number of sites vary, 600 to 700 sites are recorded with the total number of sites, both discovered and undiscovered, being much higher. Given the high rate of deltaic subsidence, it is probable that many former sites have sunk beneath the marsh surface and will only be discovered during construction activity. Unfortunately, many sites have already been destroyed because of residential or industrial developments.

By far, the most common type of archeological site in coastal Louisiana is the midden, which is a concentration of various kinds of refuse which built up into a formless heap over a period of years. These middens consist mainly of shells of mollusks such as the brackish water clam, Rangia cuneata, but also included ash, bones, shell, dirt, pottery fragments, and other debris of daily living (Gagliano, 1969). Since it is generally believed that Indians lived on these growing refuse piles, middens represent habitation sites as well as garbage piles. (Shenkel, 1974).

Less numerous than middens are hillocks, which are earth and shell mounds intentionally formed and given definite shape by their builders. These mounds were built primarily as burial or temple monuments and are prominent landmarks because of their elevation (McIntyre, 1958).

Site Numbering

Through the considerable number of surveys undertaken in Louisiana, a generally accepted sequence of cultural periods has been developed, which is listed in Table 1. These cultural periods are used when describing the mapped archeological sites.

TABLE I

Coastal Louisiana Culture Sequence

In Louisiana, archeological sites are referenced by a site number assigned in accordance with the Smithsonian River Basin Survey System. Under this system, each state first is given a number (Louisiana number is 16), then each parish (or county) has a two-letter abbreviation, and lastly each site within the parish is given a number in order of its discovery or recording. Thus, 16OR5 is the fifth site recorded in Orleans Parish, Louisiana. As mentioned earlier, numerous sites have been destroyed, so the following list of mapped sites has numerical gaps. These omissions represent sites which were recorded prior to their destruction (Shenkel, 1974).

Archeological Reference

The primary reference source for the Archeological site overlay is a report by the Louisiana State Archeologist, Robert Neumann, entitled An Archeological Assessment of Water Resource Planning Areas 9 & 10.

Site information for the parishes of Iberville, East and West Baton Rouge, Livingston, and Ascension was obtained from a report by Dr. William G. Haag, entitled Archeological Sites in the Capitol Region. Each site is listed by its official number. However, because of mapping space constraints, the state number 16 and the parish letters were omitted. The number used was the last number referring to the site within a parish; therefore, the parish boundaries overlay should be used with this overlay.

Unfortunately, this site list is incomplete because no complete systematic survey of archeological sites throughout the Louisiana Coastal Zone has been made. Mapped sites represent only a small percentage of the total archeological resource.

DEVELOPMENTAL AREAS OF
PARTICULAR CONCERN

PARTICULAR CONCERN

Selection Criteria

The Developmental Areas mapped are of three categories:

1. Developed Areas. Developed areas are land areas of existing urban, commercial, and industrial development; including cities, towns, villages, strip and clustered development, commercial service areas, industrial parks, and transportation, communication, and utility facilities. The sources of these data are recently completed maps of existing land use done for Louisiana by the U.S. Geological Survey.
2. Pressured Areas. Pressured areas are land areas in which development is either proposed or projected due to expansion of existing developed areas. Source information for pressured areas was derived primarily from opinion questionnaires sent to parish influentials, plans of certain public works projects, local governments, and studies done for the Office of State Planning on projected growth areas.
3. Development Corridors. Development corridors are land areas that, due to topography and soil conditions, are most suitable for man's use. Due to the unique topography of the coastal area, development has traditionally occurred on the slightly higher natural levee ridges between wetland basins. Three major development corridors exist in the coastal region: the New Orleans - Baton Rouge, the Slidell - Baton Rouge, and the New Orleans - Lafayette corridors. Most existing and projected development is located in these three corridors. There are several other smaller corridors which lie along smaller abandoned river distributaries, highways, major navigation channels, or flood protection levees. These include corridors along the Mississippi River below New Orleans, Bayou Lafourche, Bayou Terrebonne, Bayou duLarge, Bayou Petit Caillou, Bayou Sale, Bayou Cypremort, Freshwater Bayou, Calcasieu River, and Interstate 10 between Lafayette and Lake Charles.

All developmental areas are shown on the corresponding overlay map. Due to the amorphous nature of most of these areas, it was not possible to list these areas by parish.
